Each volume of this series is a reminder of the key role played by the late William Bell Clark, initial editor. Drawing upon his deep knowledge of the Navy in the American Revolution, his initial selections and arrangements of materials compiled over a devoted lifetime provided a framework on which subsequent efforts have continued to build.

FOREWORD

"My future Success must be very uncertain. . . however I will not yet give up the pursuit." The writer was Captain John Paul Jones, USN; the occasion, one of his reports to the Marine Committee of the Continental Congress; the bearer, another of his British prizes from the North Atlantic shipping lanes: the brigantine Favourite, Liverpool-bound with a cargo of West Indies sugar which Captain Jones diverted westward instead, the better to sweeten the prospects of the rebellious American States.

Here in one laconic sentence is the essence of America's mood and outlook during the summer and autumn of 1776, the period covered by Volume 6 of Naval Documents of the American Revolution. Independence had been declared at last, but the real winning of it was barely underway. Modest successes on the high seas did not offset the stinging defeats dealt Washington's army at New York City and Benedict Arnold's little fleet on Lake Champlain during these months. Both engagements bought time, but what would time bring? As the fledgling Republic braced for its first winter, no one could say. However an answer of sorts does run through all the papers collected here -- an iron determination, come what might, to "not yet give up the pursuit" of liberty and nationhood.

It is a pleasure to welcome a new book in this distinguished historical series. In these pages, just as in those of Volume V to which I contributed a foreword two years ago, there is much to stir the heart and steel the purpose of Americans today -- seaman recruit or Commander in Chief, President or private citizen.

The voices of patriots present at the creation convey our heritage of heroism with a vividness no polished historian writing for the ages can match. They remind us of how narrow was the margin of survival, personal and national alike on which these men and women worked to build a nation. This is brought home to us, for example, in the words of commanders concerned with the privations endured by their men as in another report from Captain Jones: "...the Men I have are scarce Able to Stand the Deck for want of Cloathing, the weather here being Very Cold." We also find reminders in the words of diplomats and statesmen playing for the highest stakes against the longest odds, men like Silas Deane, America's representative at the French court: "The fate of my country depends, in a great measure, on the arrival of these supplies...."

Reading all this, we might marvel more than ever that in the end, seven long years from the events of this book, the revolutionaries did prevail. And why? Because weak as the Americans of those days were in arms, poor as they were in goods, they were rich and strong and steadfast in spirit.

There is the great message of this book and its companion volumes issued or yet to come. Deeper than the resource these documents represent for the scholar, beyond the fascination they hold for the casual reader, lies the home truth of all our history from that day to this: all that America has been or is or hopes to be she owes to the Spirit of '76. By helping to rekindle this spirit for our Nation's Bicentennial era, the present work honors the U. S. Navy's finest traditions of excellence and service to the national interest.

INTRODUCTION

Naval power at sea and on inland waters played key roles in the period of the Revolutionary War covered by this volume of documents.

British transports and the convoying fleet, commanded by Admiral Lord Howe, had sailed through the Narrows of New York in July. General Clinton and Commodore Sir Peter Parker joined the forces of the Howe brothers by sea after the failure to capture Charleston, South Carolina. Then, the British launched their attack across the bay on 22 August 1776, projecting troops ashore on Long Island and providing gunfire support from ships of the fleet. Had the American army been trapped on Long Island, as very nearly happened, the cause of independence would probably have been lost then and there.

Supported and sustained by sea power, New York would thereafter be the main base for British operations. This gave them an excellent harbor and central location for naval operations along the Eastern seaboard, and provided flexibility for deployments of army forces to any location that could be reached by water—far more rapidly than Washington's troops could move by land.

Had the forces of Sir Guy Carleton, coming down the waterways from Canada, been able to link up with the forces stationed at New York, the result might have been eventually decisive in favor of the British. This time it was the fresh water navy of Benedict Arnold that, despite the bad beating on Lake Champlain, so delayed the advance south that the British effort was given up for that year.

Thus it was that the use of British sea power was very nearly decisive in the summer of 1776, and that naval operations on inland waters in the fall frustrated actions that would have cut the states in two.

The Depository Location pages in this volume list some eighty activities from Venice, Italy, to San Marino, California, from which manuscripts have been selected for inclusion herein. This list bears witness to a fact which cannot be overly emphasized, namely that the success and continued progress of the Naval Documents of the American Revolution series is dependent upon the resources, the knowledge and generous cooperation of numerous individuals, libraries, historical societies, archives and museums in the United States and abroad. Unpublished Crown copyright material in the Public Record Office, London, is reproduced by permission of Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Dr. Maurice Bear Gordon, a physician with a keen feeling for history, has taken time from a busy medical practice to prepare the fine pictorial essay, "Naval and Maritime Medicine During the Revolution," which enriches this volume.

Within the Naval History Division, the editor, William James Morgan, is strongly supported by dedicated and extremely competent associates in the Historical Research Branch—Mr. Robert L. Scheina, Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Scheffenacker, Mr. Robert I. Campbell, Mr. E. Gordon Bowen-Hassell, Lieutenant (junior grade) Kristin G. Tryon, relieved by Ensign Mary L. Greeves, Chief Yeoman Lenzie D. Crosby, Mrs. Carolyn Ransdell, and on summer Naval Reserve duty, Master Chief Petty Officer George K. McCuistion.

Mr. W. Bart Greenwood, Navy Department Librarian, assisted by Miss Mary Pickens of the Library staff, has once again searched out and collected appropriate maps and charts. Lieutenant Commander Richard M. Gannaway, while on temporary Naval Reserve duty, joined with Mr. Charles R. Haberlein, Jr. of the Naval History Division's Curator Branch to collect, select, and identify the many contemporary illustrations to be found in the volume.

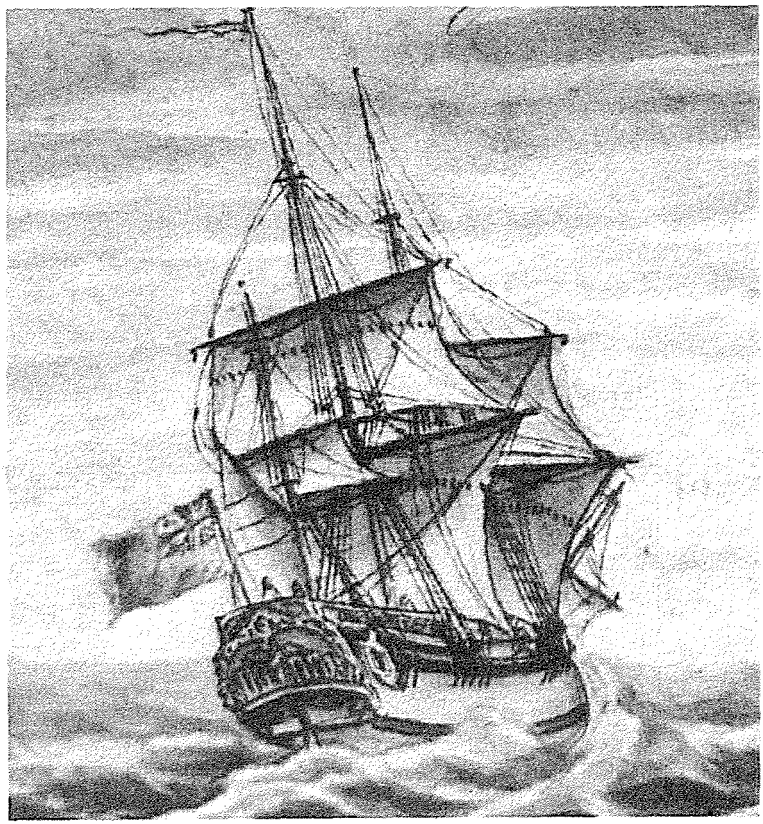
Commander W. E. May, RN (Ret.), undertook indispensable research in the Public Record Office and other United Kingdom depositories. Sound and valuable translation services, from several languages, have been provided by Commander Canio Di Cairano, USNR (Ret.), and personnel of the Naval Reserve translator program in the Office of Naval Intelligence.

To all, named and unnamed, who have contributed to the work and thus have made it possible, our debt is great, our gratitude boundless.

Edwin B. Hooper

PREFACE

Documents contained in this volume, as in previous volumes in the series, are selections from the manuscripts brought together from domestic and foreign sources by the Naval History Division and the late William Bell Clark. The collection, mostly on microfilm, is vast and comes from as widely scattered locations as San Marino, California, and Venice, Italy.



The Naval History Division continues to expand its document holdings. During the period this volume was under preparation, for example, significant additions for subsequent volumes were added from several southern states and the Public Record Office, London. From the latter, an already imposing collection of logs of Royal Navy ships operating in American and West Indian waters was markedly expanded.

Original manuscripts are the object of the collection effort. While some pertinent items from sound and modern editorial scholarship are used in Naval Documents volumes, every effort is made to avoid transcripts, and to replace with original manuscripts those older printed document compilations which may be suspect. While this is not always possible, the results achieved have been highly rewarding.

The term "naval document" is not subject to as precise a definition as are the papers of an individual or a single organization. Documentation bearing upon the regular naval forces on both sides, state navies, privateers, merchant shipping, logistics of the conflict, and operations on sea, lake, bay and river fall within the context of "naval document" as used in this series.

For purposes of selecting what material to include in a particular volume, the focus is on those documents which give the most comprehensive coverage to naval aspects of major events during the volume's time span, as well as those which present the user with a meaningful overview of the entire sea effort.

The mass of documentary material is such that only a percentage of that available can be placed in the Naval Documents volumes. Nevertheless, the Naval History Division's entire collection supplements the printed work, and forms an available ever-deepening reservoir for scholarly research and writing.

This drawing and others of similar nature throughout the Volume are from journals kept on board ships Lloyd and Betsey, Nicholas Pocock, Master. (Courtesy of the Trustees of the National Maritime Museum, London.)

SUMMARY

The Declaration of Independence bolstered the American spirit, and changed the nature of the Revolution. No longer a struggle for rights by British colonists, it now became a battle for the formation of a new nation. However, Americans would have scant time to savor the heady spirit of the Declaration, or to revel in mutual congratulations over the increased number of prizes taken on the high seas, or the thumping defeat of the enemy before Charleston.

To the northward, both adversaries rushed completion of the small fleets with which they would vie for control of that critical invasion route from Canada—Lake Champlain. But events in August 1776 were dominated by preparations for, and the final unleashing of, the huge British amphibious assault on New York.

The Howe brothers, General and Admiral, enjoyed overwhelming superiority on land and afloat at New York. Mastery of the harbor and surrounding rivers belonged to the British. Their troops could be moved and supplied by water without opposition.

Crossing in ships' boats from the Staten Island staging area, waves of British and Hessian soldiers landed on Long Island under the massed guns of the Royal Navy. In the ensuing Battle, August 27, Washington's forces were soundly defeated with heavy losses. Only a well executed withdrawal across the East River to Manhattan saved the American army from complete annihilation which could well have brought the Revolution to a sudden end at Brooklyn Heights.

New York, the important port which the enemy had desperately needed since evacuating Boston and which he was to hold throughout the war, was now his. Yet, Washington's battered army remained intact and could fight another day.

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM AN OFFICER AT TICONDEROGA, TO A GENTLEMAN IN THIS TOWN [BALTIMORE], DATED AUGUST 1, 1776." [1]

We are fitting out a naval force on the lakes.—We have three schooners, one sloop, and several gundalows, with about 300 men, including seamen and marines. There are upwards of Fifty ship-carpenters from Philadelphia, at Skeensborough, who are building Row Gallies, on the construction of those in the river Delaware, so that in a month's time our strength on the Lakes will be very considerable: In that space of time, from the best intelligence, General Burgoyne intends to visit us.

. . . We are informed that the English have one schooner launched, and three more on the stocks at St. John's, that they build batteaus fast, and carry on their preparations for crossing the lakes, with the utmost assiduity.

MAJOR GENERAL PHILIP SCHUYLER TO JOHN HANCOCK [1]

[Extract] German Flatts august 1st 1776.

General Arnold in a Letter of the 24th Ult: from Tyonderoga advises me, that only seventy Sailors could be drafted out of the Army and that three hundred would be wanting and intreated that Measures should be taken to procure them—I have accordingly written to Governor Trumbull on the Subject, and as General Arnold suggested that they could not be got for the Wages allowed Seamen by Congress (as these would have no prospect of making prizes) – I have therefore ventured to intreat the Governor to engage them on the best Terms he can, as Congress will perceive by the following Extract of my Letter of Yesterday's Date.

"I am this Moment informed that only seventy Sailors can be procured out of our Northern Army, and that we shall want two or three hunderd more and that they may possibly be procured in Connecticut, and it is conjectured that Captains Samuel Chew and Francis Brown of New Haven, Capt Amos Green of Stamford, Captain [Azariah] Whitlesey of Saybrook and Capt Seth Warner of Haddam would if not employed, be willing to engage as Captains to command Vessels on Lake Champlain – I am a Stranger to all these Gentlemen – permit me to beg the Favor of you to send to them or such others as you may think proper, to engage forty Men a piece and to make the best Contract you can with them for their and their Mens Monthly Wages and Allowance which will be strictly complyed with." – I hope this Measure will meet with the Approbation of Congress as the Necessity of having Sailors is evident, and as there can be no Doubt but that Governor Trumbull will make the most favorable Contract for the public that he can.

[Extract] New York Augt 1st 1776

Since my last nothing of importance has occurred, or that is worthy of notice except an augmentation of about twenty nine Ships and Brigs with seven or eight smaller vessels to the Enemy's Fleet – I have not yet learned what they bring, certainly – However, some Troops were seen landing from them yesterday, which the General who observed them took to be Artillery Men. It is not improbable that they may be some of the Guards whose dress is pretty much like that of the Artillery –

P. S. The three Galleys you were so kind as to order have safely arrived also two from Rhode Island. With these and one that is finished here we are preparing to attempt something against the Ships above –

They killed several of the enemy, as they heard a great shrieking and crying amongst them.

Thursday, Augst. 1st. [1776]

This Morning between 40 and 50 Sail appeared in Sight, which proved to be Sir Peter Parker's Fleet, with Generals Clinton & Lord Cornwallis, and the Troops under their Command, on board. They have had an unsuccessful Attack upon Charles Town, and lost near 200 Men, in Killed & Wounded, belonging to the Ships. Three Frigates, who led the Charge, run aground in going up, through Ignorance of the Pilots; and, very happily, the Experiment of 50 Guns, arriving the Day before, by interposing between the Fort & them saved the whole Fleet from Destruction. The Acteon, a new Frigate of 28 Guns, it being impossible to get off, was scuttled & burnt. Under all these Disadvantages, the Reinforcement of 2900 Men is an agreeable Circumstance, and especially as they are in very good Health. The Ships, in coming in, made a very fine Appearance.

"Extract of a letter from Philadelphia, Aug. 1." [1]

Last night arrived an account of the capture of the brig Richmond, by the Congress, fitted out of this place. She was bound from London and Nevis for Halifax, and had on board the following articles, viz, 1078 joes, 672 guineas, 15 moidores, 41 hogsheads of rum, 6 hogsheads, 5 tierces, and 5 barrels of sugar, 1 hogshead of loaf sugar, 24 hogsheads of prize molasses, 3 cases of drugs, and a trunk of Irish linen. The brig was arrived at Egg harbour; the gold they hid in the water cask. The cash, and several London passengers, are on board the privateer, who was left in chase of a three-decker. They took several London letters directed for people in New York, also some newspapers, one of them of the 23d of April, which is the only one we have not seen before. It contains very little, except advices from Jamaica, by which they seem alarmed at the arrival of the French troops at Hispaniola, and that some of the merchants had forbid their orders for goods, expecting a visit from them. That seven ships, one of them the Hancock and Adams, with wheat, had arrived at Lisbon from Philadelphia; and that two with tobacco, and one wheat loaded ship, were arrived in France.

Mr. Gibb's ship, capt. Robinson, is below, from Marseilles, with 1100 arms, 37 tuns of lead, 15 tuns of powder, flints, &c. I have just seen the supercargo, who tells me they are seven weeks out; that he could not procure a newspaper, although he offered a guinea for one, but saw one as late as the 25th of May.

CAPTAIN CHARLES POPE TO THOMAS RODNEY [1]

Dr Sir Wilmington August 1st 1776

Since I saw you in Newcastle, I have been treating with a Carpenter of this place, who engages to build and have ready for launching a Vessel by the Middle of October provided we procure three or four Workmen for him—At present he has but two, and says it will take six hands to build her in ten weeks:—The Dimensions agreed on are 54 feet Keel, 20 feet Beam and 8 feet Hold. The Dimensions of the Brig Lexin[g]ton Commd by Capt. Barrey [John Barry] is 58 feet Keel—21 feet Beam—and 9 feet Hold—The Carpenters say her length will be a considerable advantage to her sailing—Several Labourers have been employed two or three days in cutting the Timber and Keel—the greatest part of the Plank is now ready—and he fully expects indeed is determined to have her on the Stocks in three or four Days.

I would recommend it particularly—nay request it as a Favor of Mr. McGarmot to ride down to Lewis Town—Cedar and Broadkill Creeks and employ all the Hands he can—the more hands the better for us—she will be the sooner off the Stocks, and I am certain hands may be got down there—I beg you may insist on Mr. McGarmots going down; as the Time is drawing fast that requires our presence in the English Channel –

I shall endeavor to get off from this Service in a few Weeks, and think there will be no great Difficulty in procuring a Discharge Was it not that I prefer the Sea to the Land Service, should continue a Soldier as long as there would be Occasion. – [2]

Best regards to the Family and remain [&c.]

[Williamsburg] Thursday August 1st 1776.

The Members present taking under their Consideration the proceedings of the Committee of Safety with respect to their Directions for building six Row-Gallies for the purpose of Transporting Troops across the Rivers pursuant to a Resolution of General Congress, find that the said Committee had empowered Persons upon James, York and Rappahanock Rivers to provide Materials for building the same; but as this Board do not know what progress may have been made therein, and do not look upon themselves as competent Judges of Naval affairs are of opinion that the Commissioners of the Navy be requested to take this Business under their Consideration, and carry the said Resolution of Congress respecting the said Row-Gallies into Execution.

It appearing that the Public Treasury is at present in an exhausted state, owing to the delay in getting ready the Dollar Bills lately ordered by Convention to be struck, and that there is a considerable sum of Continental Money deposited with the Treasurer by the Congress for the purpose of exchanging the same for Gold and silver which on Trial is found to be impracticable, Ordered therefore that the Treasurer be requested to pay any warrants which may be drawn by this Board, or the Navy Board during the present situation of the Treasury out of the said Continental money to be replaced hereafter; and that he be informed at the same Time, that the Council will issue as few warrants as may be, until the Treasury can be restored to a better Condition.

JOHN ALMON'S Remembrancer, 1776 [1]

St. Vincent's, Aug 1.

The Shark man of war, Capt Bennett [sic John Chapman], on her way from Antigua to this island, opposite the island of Martinico, fell in with a North American privateer, mounting 18 ten pounders. The action lasted near two hours, when the latter was obliged to sheer off; and the former pursued till she received two twenty-four pound shot from the fort at Martinico, which obliged her to desist; and the captain went on shore to make his complaint to the French governor, who declared he would not suffer any English man of war to come within reach of his cannon after the Americans; that if they were pirates he would not countenance them, but by no means looking on them in that light; they claimed his protection while they remained at Martinico; when they put to sea it was their own affair.

Captain Bennett [sic] learned at Martinico, that this same American vessel had taken two English ships homeward bound, and that they had 39 prisoners on board; but the captains nor names of the vessels he could not hear; the colours which the American shewed were a field white and yellow, with 13 stripes.[2]

New-England Chronicle, FRIDAY, AUGUST 2, 1776

[Boston, August 2]

Messieurs Printers, In your paper of the 25th instant you mention, "last Sunday a ship of 200 tons burthen, commanded by James Arnout, was sent into this harbour by Commodore Hopkins, &c." In the same paper, we observe that a certain Caleb Hopkins, who calls himself "Commander of the armed ship called the George, &c." has libelled the ship called the Queen of England. We are greatly surprised at his assurance, in libelling said ship, as she was not within one and half miles of the George when she struck, and an island between them, and the Commodore (as he is called) did not come on board the Queen of England, 'till an hour after she struck, and then was employed only as a pilot.

Winthrop Gray }
Zebedee Redding } Captains.[1]

Hull, July 29, 1776.

Friday last was taken to the Eastward of Mount Desart, by two Whalemen, and last Wednesday sent in here, a large Schooner of 160

Tons, from Jamaica bound to Halifax, laden with Rum, Sugar, Pimenta, &c. She, it is said, was formerly owned in Salem.

Last Lord's Day was carried into Marblehead, the Ship Peggy, commanded by James Kennedy, mounts six 3 and two 2-pounders, bound for New York, taken by the armed Vessels Hancock, Capt. [Samuel] Tucker, and the Franklin, Captain [John] Skimmer. She is one of the Fleet of 24 Sail, who, it is said, by those that were taken in her, came out with transports, under convoy of two men of war, the Renown of 50 and the Flora of 20 guns, having on board a number of troops. – The cargo consists of 75 doz. hose, 180 yards Irish sheeting, 2 boxes cord, 74 doz. porter, 83 doz. strong beer, 311 tierces salted beef, 6 barrels herring, 24 camp kettles, 5 doz. canteens, 2 doz. kettles with covers, candlesticks and spoons, 2648 mutton hams, 50 doz. Rappee snuff, 100 gallons rum, 3884 yards oznabrigs, 12 and half doz. claret, 4 barrels flour, 2 kegs barley, 230 doz. red port wine, 50 doz. Sherry, 53 doz. white port wine, 16 doz. strong beer, amounting to £.1509–1–9 sterling, and some cash. Also the following Tory gentlemen and ladies, viz. Patrick Reed, Thomas Frazier, Robert Semple, and wife, Elizabeth Burns, John Burns, Abigail Pecit, Thomas Semple, and the pious Benjamin Davis and son, Thomas Pamp, and John Whitehead. The Privateer Warren, Capt. Burk, engaged with another of the fleet, and near taking her, when by some accident she had three of her men blown up and seven wounded, which obliged them to put into port.[2]

The above Tories were brought to Town in a Marblehead Schooner on Monday morning, and escorted up to Gaol; – they inform that they left Halifax the 4th July; that they sailed in Company with 3 Transports with Hessian Troops bound to New-York; and that the Day they left Halifax, they saw a fleet of 40 Sail, which they supposed to be Transports with Hessian Troops.

1. Gray and Redding commanded two companies of the 14th Continental Infantry, stationed at Hull and Point Alderton.

2. The Warren's engagement was with the British transport Unity, whose captain made the following report of the encounter:

> Off the Isle of Sable, early in the Morning, we saw a Schooner, which seemed inclined to speak with us; about Noon she was only a Half a mile from us, when she fired a Shot to bring us too; she had hoisted no Colours notwithstanding she fired a Shot; we were surprised at this, and could therefore hardly think she was one of our armed Schooners, as the Officer would certainly know his Duty better: we accordingly brought too, but took Care also to get all the Soldiers up, and in Arms, and had them all ready under the Quarter-deck, and out of Sight; she ran under our Stern, and bade us strike to the Congress; on which having four Guns abaft, (all we had on board) we complimented her with a Couple; she then kept on our bow, and seemed inclined to board us, our Soldiers immediately went forward, and gave them such a Discharge of small Arms, that she found she had caught a Tartar. I believe we killed them five Men at this Fire. She then shot a-head of us, in order, I believe, to consider what to do; the Determination was to leave us, which they did, by steering away South, whilst we kept on for Halifax Harbour, not having suffered the least Hurt. The Schooner had ten Guns, and I believe upwards of fifty Hands.

BRIGADIER GENERAL GEORGE CLINTON TO GEORGE WASHINGTON [1]

[Extract] Fort Montgomery 2d August 1776.

On Thursday last the Shipping & Tenders fell down to the Mouth of Croton River where they have ever since continued at Anchor near the East Shore. Since which they have attempted once to land on this Side the River with their Barge but were repulsed by our Militia.

On Satturday last the 300 New England Militia left Peeks Kill & returned Home without giving me the least Notice of it, tho I believe they had the Consent of the Committee of [Provincial] Congress who expected in the New Levies from West Chester & Dutchess that Evening to Supply their Place. They were disappointed, the Shore, of course unguarded & the very same Evening the Enemy's Barge came up the River six Mile from where the Shipping lay, went a Mile or Upwards into the Country & took off a yoke of Oxen, a Steer, a Cow & 10 Sheep from the Farm of one Baily, who it is said is on Board the Phenix, and I suppose was their Guide.

Maryland Council of Safety to Brigadier General Henry Hooper [1]

[Extract]
No 105
Sir, Since our last we have had advice from Major [Thomas] Price our commanding officer in Saint-Mary's, that the British fleet lay near the mouth of Smith's creek in Potowmack, that they were very weak in Landforces not exceeding 300 men, that they were so sickly that 50 dead bodies had appeared on the shores, chiefly negroes, and that having gone up the River Potowmack to take in water & returned, he imagined they would soon sail from that Quarter. –

Their Forces appear so inconsiderable and contemptible to him, that he has dismissed all the militia, and keeps only two independent Companies to oppose them . . .

We do not expect from their weak state that any attempt will be made, except to plunder, and we think the 500 regular Troops together with the 200 Militia, a sufficient Force to protect your shore[2] until the fleet sails, which we daily expect to hear of, and if some of them go to sea & only a few remain at our Capes, and in Virginia to destroy our Trade, as is suggested to us will be the case, the remainder of the militia also may be discharged. –

If the schooner you have taken would answer to make an armed Boat or vessel for the Defence of this Colony, we should be glad you would send her over that she may be put in repair & fitted for the service, if she is unfit, an Acct of her Size, value and stores will be agreeable to us.

PURDIE'S Virginia Gazette, FRIDAY, AUGUST 2, 1776

Williamsburg, August 2.

Since our last, we have certain advice that lord Dunmore, with his motley band of pirates and renegadoes, have burnt the elegant brick house of William Brent, esq; at the mouth of Aquia creek, in Stafford county, as also two other houses lower down Potowmack river, the property of widow ladies, with several ferry boats; that on Tuesday se'nnight he relanded on St. George's island, but was beat off by 1200 Marylanders; that he had burnt eight of his vessels, and was seen standing down the bay the Thursday after with all his fleet.

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM ST. EUSTATIA, DATED AUGUST 2, 1776." [1]

We have just received an account from Martinico that the Reprisal, Capt. Weeks [Lambert Wickes], belonging to the Congress, had an engagement with the Shark sloop of war, of sixteen guns, belonging to his Britannic Majesty, within sight of St. Piere's wherein the former had greatly the advantage, and acquired much honor amongst the French, many of whom were spectators of the battle. The American vessel afterwards going into the harbour of St. Piere's, the Captain of the Shark demanded the American rebel, as he termed it, but the French General refused to deliver him up. A French frigate is just arrived from Old France, with despatches, as late as the 22d of June, to the Governors of the different islands, ordering them to protect and assist the American vessels as far as possible, and to be prepared to defend themselves, if necessary. From this it appears a French war is not far off.

LIBEL OF CAPTAINS DANIEL BUCKLIN AND JOSEPH WHITE AGAINST THE PRIZE BRIGANTINE Harlequin [1]

State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

Providence, ss.

A Libel is filed before me, in Behalf of Daniel Bucklin, of Providence, in the County of Providence, in the said State, Mariner, and Commander of the private Sloop of War called the Montgomery, duly commissioned by the Hon. Nicholas Cooke, Esq; Governor of said State; and also in behalf of John White, Mariner, and Commander of the private Sloop of War called the Revenge, belonging to Salem, in the State of Massachusetts Bay, also duly commissioned with Letters of Marque and Reprisal, to cruize against the Enemies of the United States of America, against the Brigantine called the Harlequin, of the burthen of about 180 Tons, with her Appurtenances, late commanded by Capt. John Goodwin; and also against the Cargo of the said Brigantine, consisting of about 119 Hogsheads, 137 Tierces and 20 Barrels of Sugar, 62 Hogsheads of Rum, 2 Boxes of Shellwork, &c. bound from the English Island of Nevis, in the West Indies, to the Port of London, in the Kingdom of Great Britain; which said Brigantine, her Appurtenances and Cargo, as 'tis said, were lately taken and captured upon the high Seas, by the said Daniel Bucklin and John White, their respective Officers and Men, belonging to said Sloops of War, and brought into the port of Providence aforesaid, and at and before the said Time of Capture, belonged to and were the Property of some of the Inhabitants of Great Britain, and were used for the Purpose of carrying Supplies to the British Fleets and Armies now acting against the said United States.

The Justice of the above Capture will be tried, at the Court erected in and for said State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantation, for Trial of maritime Causes, to be holden at Providence on the 19th Day of August, A.D. 1776, at the Hour of Ten in the Forenoon. This Notice is given, pursuant to Law, that the Owner or Owners of the said Brigantine, her Appurtenances and Cargo, or any Person or Persons concerned therein, may appear and shew Cause, if any they have, why the same should not be condemned.

John Foster, Judge of said Court.

1. Providence Gazette, August 3, 1776. This issue also carries notice of libel against brigantine Mary sent in by privateer sloop-of-war Diamond, William Chace, but also taken earlier by Wingate Newman in Philadelphia privateer Hancock.

Providence Gazette, SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1776

Providence, August 3.

Sunday last the Montgomery Privateer, Capt. Daniel Bucklin, of this Port, returned from a Cruize, during which she took three valuable Prizes, also two others in Company with a Privateer belonging to Salem:[1] She brought in with her a Snow of 180 Tons, Capt. [John] Goodwin, bound from Nevis to London, having on board 119 Hogsheads, 137 Tierces and 20 Barrels of Sugar, 62 Hogsheads of Rum, &c.[2]

On Monday arrived a Brig. taken by the Diamond Privateer, Captain William Chace, of this Port; her Cargo consists of 195 Hogsheads and some Barrels of Sugar, 65 Bales of Cotton, 25 Tons of Fustick, and a Quantity of Staves and Heading: she was bound from Tortola to Liverpool.[3]

Extract of a Letter from a Planter at Tortola to his Friend in Liverpool, dated July 1, 1776, found on board the last mentioned Prize.

If this unhappy Dispute between Great-Britain and America should be brought to a Conclusion, and they be once more united, there will be an Opening for Sale of Rum, though to the Windward the Price keeps up I hear to 2s.6d. per Gallon owing to Government contracting with Mr. Blackburn for One Hundred Thousand Gallons for the Troops in America, I am afraid many Planters here will suffer for want of Lumber, as they have it not in their Power to send for it. I am informed there is a Deal of good Lumber to the Southward of Georgia.

A letter from Pierre Van Cortlandt and Zeph. Platt, Esqrs. was received and read, and is in the words following to wit:

Head-Quarters, Mouth of Croton, Augt. 2d, 1776.

Gentlemen—The enemy's ships lie off here, and their barges row up and down the river a nights; and notwithstanding our utmost exertions some infamous rascal must have given them information that the New-England troops went off on Saturday last, and not a sufficient number coming in to guard the shore, they landed at one Bailey's on Sunday night, and went back a half a mile and drove off one pair of oxen, two cows, one calf, one heifer and eleven sheep: no doubt had the assistance of some tories on shore. . . .

JOHN COVENHOVEN TO THE NEW JERSEY DELEGATES IN THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS [1]

In Convention of the State of New Jersey
New Brunswick Augt 3d 1776

Gentlemen – As it is of great Importance that the Communication between New York, this & the Southern Colonies be preserved, and no adequate provisions that we know of, having been made to keep open the Ferries over Pasaick & Hackinsack Rivers between Newark & Powles Hook, which in their present Situation may not only be safely obstructed by a single armed Vessel of the Enemy lying near them; but the Ferry Boats may be seized & the passing & repassing of our Troops on emergent Occasions, thereby, for a considerable time impeded; And as from the exposed & unguarded Situation of the Settlements up said Rivers, the Creeks & Country adjacent to Newark Bay the Enemy may receive Supplies of Provisions either by Plunder or from disaffected Persons; And the making Provision for the above Purposes; as they intimately consider all the United States belonging to Your honorable House, We must desire You to propose, at first Opportunity, in Congress, that the most speedy & effectual Measures may be adopted to obtain these salutary Ends—

We conceive there are but two Practicable Methods – Vizt By Batteries at the Several Ferries or by armed Vessels.—The Ground on each Side of the Ferries, being low salt Marsh, will not, without very great Expences, admit of being fortified; but if this had not been the Case, a larger Number of heavy Cannon wou'd be necessary to answer our Purposes than perhaps can be procured; or if procurable, than woud be necessary if employed on board one or more Vessels of the Row Galley or Gondola Construction – Protection by armed Vessels have a further Advantage over Fortifications at the Ferries; the Fortifications must have great Strength, a considerable Number of Cannon & a large Body of Men stationed there, or a Descent of the Enemy might take Cannon & Men together, as the Cannon cou'd not be retreated with, and the Distance of the Ferries from Succour, too great to expect Supplies in Time—On the Contrary, an armed Vessel stationed at or near each Ferry of the Row Galley or Gondola kind, carrying only an 18 Pounder each, with Swivels, Cohorns or Blunderbusses may be sufficient, & their Forces may be occasionally united; for being so contiguous, they may readily act in Concert; and by being made to draw but little Water and to row swiftly, may if they find the Force attacking them too powerful, secure a safe Retreat where the Enemy's Tenders cannot pursue them –

But perhaps heavy Cannon may be spared for one Gondola & not more; in such Case a Vessel of the Cat Schooner kind might be usefully employed for the other Vessel:—We are informed there are two in Pasaick River, well built & almost new & that either of them may be hired for a small Consideration provided their Owners are assured of their being returned in as good Order as when delivered or of being paid the Value in Case they shou'd be irreparably damaged—The Dimensions about 45 feet in Length—14 feet, Breadth 4½ feet depth, draw but little Water & one of them sails remarkably swift.

Altho Gondolas may not so advantageously attack Ships of War, yet their Tenders, or Vessels of such Size as can approach the Ferries will not chuse to come in the Way of an 18 or 24 Pounder—

If not a single Cannon of this Weight can be spared; perhaps both the above-mentioned Cat Schooners may be usefully employed in this Service; they will probably carry either two six Pounders on each Side, & a 6 or 9 Pounder in the Bow, or three 4 Pounders on each Side & a 6 Pounder in the Bow—besides Swivels, Cohorns & Blunderbusses (as they may be procurable,) Spears & small Arms—

We were so perfectly convinced of the Importance & Utility of making Provision for the above Purpose, that had the State of our Funds permitted it, as much depends on Dispatch, We might probably have gone into the Measures necessary to that End, not doubting but Congress, when convinced of their general Utility to the United States wou'd have ordered a Reimbursement of the Expences – &c

Two other armed Vessels might be advantageously stationed at proper Places between the Ferries abovementioned & the Mouth of Raritan River; they might Cooperate occasionally, either for the Purposes afsd, or for annoying the Enemy, or be employed to protect the Ferry from South to Perth Amboy & the Navigation of Raritan River; which Protection wou'd be a great Saving either in Troops crossing the Ferry to Amboy or in transporting Provisions, Baggage &c. from Brunswick, by Water, to the Camp at Amboy—

As it is important that no Time be lost in making the afsd Provision; And as from the Multiplicity of interesting Business before Congress, this may be delayed; If Congress will provide for the Expence, & request it, We shall be willing to give a helping hand towards carrying their Resolutions on this Subject into Effect

We are Gentlemen [&c.]

Caesar Rodney to Thomas Rodney [1]

[Extract] Philada. August the 3d 1776

Yesterday Came to Town a Ship belonging to the Congress from France with ten Tunns of Powder, about forty Tunns of Lead, one thousand Stand of Arms &c. &c. And the Same day an Armed Veshell taken by Captain [John] Barry [2]

At sea –

Since I finished my other Letter have been up to Congress where We Recd Inteligence by letter from Captn. Weeks [Lambert Wickes] in the Congress ship, the Reprisal, That he has at Sea on the 13th of July taken two prizes, a Ship and a Schooner bound for Liverpool Loaded with Cotten, Sugar Rum &c.[3] The Letter Came by the Prize Schooner which arrived in an Inlet near Egg Harbour—and the Ship Prize has been Seen off the Capes of Delaware and Supposed by this time got in [4]. . .

3. The ship Friendship and schooner Peter.
4. Two letters were written to Thomas Rodney this date. This entry is an extract from both letters.

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 3." [1]

Since my last, we have arrived, a sloop from North-Carolina with naval stores, and a sloop of 8 four pounders; she belonged to the Goodrich's of Virginia, and was commanded by one of them; was out 3 days from Bermuda, when he discovered and gave chace to the brig Lexington, Captain Barry, but finding his mistake, put about too late; for in about an hour and a half, Barry ran along side, when she struck. She has 8 Negroes on board; all, or most of the men, to the amout of 25, entered on board of Barry – [2]

This morning we have an express from a schooner taken by Captain Weekes, in the Continental ship Reprisal; she was bound from St. Vincents for Liverpool, with upwards of 100 hogsheads of rum, and is safe at Absecomb Inlet. They bring an account of his having taken a ship of 4 or 500 tons burthen, from Grenada for London; she was quite full, and by the captors said to be worth 35,000 l. A ship was seen last Wednesday to the southward off our Cape, by the North-Carolina man, which we hope is the prize.[3]

Captain Fowler, in a sloop belonging to your city, is arrived safe in port with 4,000 l. worth of indigo, in 12 or 13 days from Charlestown; she passed the [British] fleet in a thunder storm. – By him we learn, that two deserters from the fleet confirm the accounts which General [Charles] Lee received from the five deserters, already published here, and further add, That the brig that had the Captain of the Commodore on board for London, had returned off Spencer's Inlet: the said Captain died soon after he got on board, and was buried on Long-Island the 3d of July: That the men began to grow sickly, and they are dissatisfied with General Clinton's conduct; they suspect he keeps a private correspondence with General Lee: That there was some talk of his being under an arrest: That the last rumour among them was, of their embarkation for Long-Island in New-York government. The Commodore's ship is so much shattered, it will take them some time to refit. The 4th of July he hoisted his pendant on board the Experiment. One shot from the fort, took off three midshipmen's heads, who happened to stand in a range, one of whom is a Nobleman's son.

A few days before Captain Fowler sailed, the whole fleet was in mourning, supposed for the death of Sir Peter Parker, who was wounded, and lost a part of his breeches in the late engagement. – [4] Captain Fowler thinks the two large ships will not be able to go over the Bar, so as to get out.

1. Constitutional Gazette, August 7, 1776.
2. The Lady Susan, Captain William Goodrich. Among those who entered on board the Lexington was Richard Dale, whose Memoir in The Port Folio (June, 1814), reads in part: "upon his return from Bermuda – whither he had gone with William Gutteridge [sic] – he was captured by captain John Barry, commander of the United States' brig Lexington, and on the same day entered as a midshipman on board said brig. This occurred in July, 1776." The owner of Lady Susan, Joseph Hinckson of Bermuda, challenged the capture on the grounds that his sloop had been illegally taken over by Lord Dunmore. On August 22, 1776, the Adimralty Court in Philadelphia ruled that the owner receive one half the money arising from the sale of Lady Susan. The remainder to go one third to Barry and his crew, and "two-thirds for the Use of the thirteen united States." Records of the Admiralty Court of Pennsylvania, April 13–December 3, 1776, LC Photocopy.
3. The schooner Peter was the vessel arrived at Absecon, and the prize ship Friendship was the one sighted by the North Carolina sloop.
4. Sir Peter Parker remained very much alive after the engagement, but the nature of his wound brought forth a satirical verse in the Constitutional Gazette, July 27, 1776:

> If "honor in the breech is lodg'd,"
> As Hudibras has shewn;
> It may from thence be fairly judg'd
> Sir Peter's honor's gone.

My Lord, Isis, Quebec, August the 4th 1776

This is conveyed by the Pearl, having under her Convoy, three Transports carrying round the Rebel Prisoners. And the Tartar, forthwith to be relieved by the Bute at the Isle of Bic, after ranging round a great part of the Gulph of St. Laurence, taking a State of the several Fisheries, & cruizing until the 15th of September between Cape Ray and Scatari, is to wait upon your Lordship.

Very shortly after my last was sent away, I received Information by Express from Chambly, that because of Want of density of the Ground, thro' which the Engineers were preparing a Road, the Enterprize of getting the Hulls of the three Vessels, transported overland from thence to St. Johns, would not answer: as to remedy the looseness thereof, would require more time and Labour, than the Season and several other Circumstances could admit of. General Carleton being just then returned from Montreal, and approving of the measure, all the Artificers I could muster superintended by Lieutenant [John] Schank who commands the Canceaux, were set to Work on the 23d Ultimo, to take down the Frame of a Ship building here—On the 26th her Stern frame, Stem, Keel, and some of her Floor Timbers went away in Long-boats for the River Sorel, and I hope are by this time at St. Johns; where Blocks were previously ordered to be laid, for her Reconstruction; her length from Stem to Stern is eighty Feet—the said long boats My Lord were willingly ceded, as may appear by the herewith inclosed, And are to be employed on Lake Champlain. I flatter myself that the Masters of the Transports, above the Rapids of Richlieu, may still (for since my last they have made Difficulties,) be prevailed upon, to follow the laudable Example Set them by their Brethren here—Who are all to depart for Spithead, the moment their men return from the Sorel.

In Consequence of the pressing Requisition of General Carleton, apprized of Mr Schank's Men instead of reserving the Canceaux arm'd Ship, to carry his more recent dispatches to the Eastward as was intended (keeping the Gaspée for that purpose) I have sent her up to the Sorel. Lieutenant Schank is to superintend the Reconstruction of the Vessel at Drawing of British Warship Used on Lake Champlain, 1776. Possibly HMS Inflexible.

St. Johns, which he saw pulled to pieces at Quebec, and to command her on the Lake, with his Officers and Men from the Canceaux, about forty in Number making Part of her Crew—A Frame taken down in the Sorel, & that of the Maria arm'd Schooner, are some time ago taken in hand – but how soon all our Force will be afloat, is impossible for me to ascertain; so much being necessary, & our Means respecting the Magnitude of the Enterprize, so scanty; & the Loss of Time in getting every thing sent so far up against predominating Westerly Winds and opposing Currents, so great; Yet I'd fain hope it might be brought to Completion, some time in September.—The Major part of the Seamen necessary for this Equipment, must be furnished by His Majesty's Ships; are to be attached to the three Vessels above alluded to; (when rebuilt,) to our flat bottom'd and the Gun-boats; And are to be commanded by Capt. [Thomas] Pringle of the Lord Howe – Lieut. [Joseph] Nunn has declined serving on Lake Ontario, and resumed the Command of the Magdalen. Mr John Stone 2d Lieutenant of the Lizard by my order, & Mr John Curling Mate of this His Majesty's Ship, who were to have served as Lieutenants under him, are transferred to Lake Champlain, where a good many Officers of that Rank are wanted. – All such Officers & Seamen, thus to be employed, are only lent or to be lent, from their respective Ships, until further Order: and for their Encouragment, are to have extraordinary Pay from General Carleton, equal to what they would have in their several Classes, on board His Majesty's Ships of War at Sea – Capt. Pringle & Lieut. Schank, are paid as Masters and Commanders – Warrant and petty Officers, the same Pay as in the Ships to which they belong, and each able and ordinary Seaman is to have 17s/6d P Mensem added to his Navy Wages – His Excellency wishes the Isis, the Juno, the Blonde, the Triton and Lord Howe to continue in this River, & in their present Stations; the Canceaux in the Sorel; the Bute at the Isle of Bic, the Gaspée & Magdalen Schooners, to be kept in readiness for carrying Dispatches as is the Juno for any particular Exigency—The Triton is returned to the Foot of the Rapids of Richlieu.

For farther particulars, I beg leave to refer You to Captain [Thomas] Wilkinson, And have the honor most respectfully to remain [&c.]

Ch[s] Douglas

P.S. I have been under the necessity of ordering Guns, with their Carriages, proportion of Shot, Tackle, Furniture &c. to be spared from His Majesty's Ships 'till the Lake Business be over: vizt. from the Isis, ten twelve, & four Six Pounders. Blonde Six twelve Pounders. Juno four twelves & two Sixes. Pearl the same; Triton, four Nines and the Lord Howe and Bute, also four Nine pounders each.

Sir, I have just Opportunity to inform you, that Yesterday at 1 o'Clock, P.M. the Gallies attacked the Phoenix and Rose off Tarry-Town. The Lady Washington fired the first Gun on our Side, in answer to one received from the Phoenix; this first shot from us, entered the Phoenix. The Washington Galley, on board of which the Commodore's Flag was hoisted, then came up within Grape-Shot of the Ships, and singly sustained their whole Fire for above a Quarter of an Hour before any other of our Vessels took a Shot from her (the Tide wasting them more than the Pilots expected, to the Eastern Shore, and the Lady Washington falling back to take her Station in the Line according to Orders.) The Spitfire advanced in a Line with the Washington, and with her behaved well. We had as hot a fire as perhaps ever was known for an Hour and an Half. The Washington, on which I was on board during the whole Engagement, had the Ledgings of her bow Guns knocked away, which prevented our working them, and was otherways considerably damaged, being thirteen Times hulled, had three Shot in her Waist, many of her Oars carried away, &c. The Lady Washington, after hulling the Phoenix six Times, had her bow and only Gun, a Thirty-two Pounder, on which we placed much Dependence, split seven Inches, and her Gun Tackles and Britchings carried away. The Spitfire was hulled several Times, and received one Shot between Wind and Water, which not being quickly discovered, occasioned her making much Water. The rest of the Gallies received considerable Damage in their Rigging, Sails and Spars. Under these Circumstances, our Commodore, Colonel Tupper, thought it prudent to give the signal for our little Fleet to withdraw, after manfully fighting a much superior Force, for two Hours.—Never did Men behave with more firm determined Spirit than our little crews; one of our Tars being mortally wounded, cried to his Messmates, "I am a dying Man, revenge my Blood, my Boys, and carry me along Side my Gun, that I may die there." – We were so preserved by a Gracious Providence, that in all our Gallies (which consisted of Six), we had but two Men killed and Fourteen wounded; two of which are thought dangerous. – We hope to have [an]other touch at these Pirates before they leave our River, which God prosper.

P.S. The following are the Particulars of the Gallies, with their killed and wounded:

The Washington, Capt. Hill, 4 wounded.
Whiting, M'Clave, 1 killed, 4 wounded.
Spitfire, Grimes, 1 Killed, 3 wounded.
Crane, Tincker, 1 wounded.
On board a whale boat 2 wounded.

Sunday, 4th [August].

In the Afternoon the Renown of 50 Guns and the Flora of 32 Guns, with 22 Sail of Convoy, came into the Harbor. We have had so many Arrivals of late, that the Rebel Commanders, we learn, give out to their People, that we send Ships down in the Night, which come up in the Course of the next Day, as a manoeuvre to intimidate them.

The Structures, which we supposed yesterday to be Fire Stages, were towed up the North River this morning; and seem to be intended for Cheveaux de Frize to block up the Passage, either to prevent the Ships, that are now above, from coming down, or our Fleet from getting up, without being raked by their Batteries. It is of a peculiar Construction; and all the Industry of malevolence, which is the most active Sort of Industry, has been used to complete it. Our People don't seem to regard it, and fancy they can easily run it down, or remove it out of their way.

[Ship Dunmore in Potomac River, Virginia], 4th of August –

Seeing a Tender of Captn Hamonds (that he had sent to Sir Peter Parker) coming up I would not close my letter till I saw Mr [Richard] Whitworth, who commands her, and I am extremley sorry to find that No 4 contains but too true an Account of our loss before Charles Town. I have letters from Sir Peter [Parker] and General Clinton, both informing me that it is perfectly out of their Power to give me any sort of assistance, which will render my Situation (if possible) more intollerable than it has been for these fourteen Months past, that I have been constantly pened up in a Ship hardly with the common Necessaries of life, but what makes it now a thousand times worse, in that I am left without even the hope of being able to render His Majesty the smallest Service, this I must say is truely discouraging, and leaves me in the utmost difficulty to determine what to do; my utmost desire is (when I do resolve) that I may do what may be most agreeable to His Majestys wishes and the best for His Service. Mr Simenton, the bearer of this, or Governor Eden, who accompanies him, will be able to inform your Lordship particularly, of the forlorn State in which they have left us; and I have the Honor to be, My Lord [&c.]

Vice Admiral James Young to Count d'Argout [1]

English Harbour, Antigua,
Sir 4th August, 1776

Captain Chapman of His Brittannic Majesty's Ship the Shark has transmitted me an Account of His being attacked off St Pierres road, Martinique, by an American Pirate, called the Reprisal, carrying 120 Men, and 18 Six pound Guns; which He would have taken, had She not been protected by the Forts, and received into the Road of St Pierre. Captain Chapman acquaints me he desisted from Engageing the Pirate, as soon as the Fort at St Pierre's by firing at him, had Signified they deemed the Vessel under their protection; as He supposed they believed her to be only an American trading Vessel comeing into their Road; however afterwards when Captain Chapman followed her into St Pierre's Bay, and acquainted Your Excellency, with the particulars of his Engagement; and desired your permission to Seize and take possession of her as an American Pirate; who could carry no Kings Commission, nor be Armed by any lawful Authority to Wage War; I am certainly very much Surprized to find you should hesitate or make any difficulty to permit him to do so. Surely, your Excellency cannot intend to Open the Ports of His Most Christian Majesty and give an open and avowed protection to Ships Armed for Offensive War, by His Brittannic Majesty's Rebellious Subjects in America, who are professedly sent into these Seas to Cruize & Annoy, and take the Vessels and property of the King of Great Britains Faithful and Peaceable Subjects. After this Explanation, I cannot suppose your Excellency will any longer protect the Pirate abovenamed; and I have sent Captain [Thomas] Eastwood of His Brittannic Majesty's Ship of War the Pomona, to Demand in the Name of the King of Great Britain (my Master); the delivery of said American Vessel, her Men, Arms &c., that I may bring them to tryal for the Offences Committed by them contrary to the general Law of Nations, and their Duty as Subjects.—

Since I have had the honour to Command the British Squadron in these Seas, I have endeavoured all that lay in me, to Cultivate friendship, and good faith, with His Most Christian Majesty's Governors at all his different possessions in these Seas, as likewise with those of other European Powers in Amity with Great Britain and whenever during the present trouble, any mistakes may have happened, have readily entered into proper Explanations concerning them, and if I thought the Officers, under my Command, at any time wrong, I have blamed, and Reprimanded them for such Conduct, and given all due Satisfaction in my power; after such friendly behaviour, and inclination in me towards the Allies of Great Britain, I could not but expect an equal return, and confess the greatness of my Disappointment to find so gross an Insult now offered to the British Flag, through your Excellency's Acquiescence— Whilst the American Vessels came into these Seas unarmed, ('tho the Traffick they were employed in, was often very pernicious and dangerous,) I did not in any instance, suffer the Ships under my Command, to attack them within the limits of any Port in Amity with Great Britain; however I presume your Excellency, as well as I do will readily draw the Line of distinction, between Vessels Manned and Armed for Offensive War, and Trading Vessels, and that the Neutrality and protection which was afforded and claimed by the latter, cannot be given the former, but they must be treated by all Powers in Amity with Great Britain as Pirates.— I wish to receive you[r] Excellency's answer, and a clear explicit explanation of your Sentiments on this Subject; by which my future Conduct must be regulated, and that I may likewise transmit the same to the Court of London, by a Ship of War I shall send to England, immediately on Captain Eastwoods return: I have the honour to be Your Excellency's [&c.]

[James Young]

P.S. I must entreat your Excellency will signify your determination about giving up the American Vessel to Captain Eastwood; that He may be enabled to Act in that matter agreeable to Commands he has received from me.

Secret Orders

In case the American Vessel [Reprisal] you are directed, by my Order of this date, to Demand the delivery of, from the Governor of Martinico, is still remaining in that Bay; You are to Anchor in the Pomona as near to her as you can; and constantly to watch her motions; and be ready to Slip and follow her in case She should attempt to get away from thence before you receive the Governor's Answer, You are in that case to follow her (notwithstanding the Forts may fire to prevent your doing so) until you get beyond the Limits of the Port, and then attack, and use your utmost endeavours to take, burn, sink, or otherways destroy said American Vessel. Should you Succeed in your Endeavours to take her you are not to return back to St Pierres but bring her forthwith to me.— However should the Compte D'argout agree to give up the Vessel, her Arms, Tackle, Furniture &c. to you, but Object to Giving up the Company of said Vessel to be tryed by the Laws against Pirates; You are in that case to accept the Vessel, her Arms, Tackle, Furniture &c, and Suffer the People to go on shore, bringing away the Vessel as directed in your other publick order of this date. – During your Stay in St Pierres Bay you are to use your best Endeavours to get the best Intelligence you can, concerning the American Vessels, and the Trade now carried on by them, and report the same to me at your return, but you are to be careful to make these Enquiries with privacy and delicacy so as to give no publick offence to the French Government; for which this shall be your Order.[2]

(Copy) [Isis, Quebec] August the 5th

An Account from St: Johns just received, gives me reason to believe, that the Frame which was building in the Sorel, & which I (with General Carleton's Approbation) ordered to be taken down, before I left Chambly, will be ready for Launching about the 16th and the Maria about the 30th of this Month – the Lieutenants Butler & Starke [2] (such by my Order only) superintend their Reconstruction – Captain [Thomas] Pringle's Command, My Lord, on Lake Champlain will be very extensive, & I dare assure myself, his Execution of the important Duties thereof, will justify my having appointed him thereto; As also General Carleton having sollicited, my so doing: And I'd fain hope recommend him to such advanced Rank, as your Lordship only can bestow.

It has been represented to me, since the foregoing was written, that there is an additional Number of prisoners, (hourly expected down the river) to be sent away, I have added the John & Christopher to the three other Transports.

As many of the Transports are immediately to sail, I confine the Tartar's Cruize between Cape North & Cape Ray, until the 15th of next Month, & shall send Orders to Captn [Thomas] Mackenzie of the Lizard at St. John's, to take a State of the Fisheries for your Lordship. Tho' our preparations for Lake Champlain, will at any rate be late, seeing many things have been in a Manner to create, yet if the hourly expected Victuallers do not arrive, I most fear Delay from a want of salted Provisions for the Army, on their leaving this Country – We are able to supply all the Seamen to be employed on the Lake, either belonging to His Majesty's Ships, or others, being in number about three hundred; but out of our Stock of four Months victualling sent out under the Tartar's Convoy, and the Remains of what We brought with Us (comparatively little) We can do hardly any thing at all for the Troops.

1. PRO, Admiralty 1/487. Continuation of August 4 letter.
2. Lieutenant John Starke, of the Maria, wrote, of this period:

The Maria was the only Vessel on the establishment of the Navy ordered for this Service, the rest being Provincial Vessels—Lieut Starke had her taken to pieces, and carried over land, the distance of twelve Miles, together with her Masts, rigging, Guns, Stores &c and had her rebuilt, and again equipped for Service, in a short time. He also exerted himself with zeal, in the carrying over the other vessels and craft intended for the expedition on the Lake, and in the equipment of them. These services were beyond the usual course of his duty as an officer serving under a Commission from the Admiralty, whose authority does not extend to the Lake; but the advantage and even the necessity of His Majesty's Service required them—His indefatiguable diligence and activity upon this occasion, and also his knowledge in various branches of the Mathematics, displayed in constructing Machines, and in applying the various mechanic powers, necessary for transporting the Vessels and craft from the foot of the Rapids of Chambly to St John's, have been mentioned much to his credit by the officers who were present, particularly by Sir Charles Douglas the commanding Naval Officer, who directed and superintended these operations; and for which, he had the honour to receive the thanks of Sir Guy Carleton the Commander in Chief, given out in Public Orders.

This very extraordinary and singular piece of Service, which can scarcely be paralelled in any age or country, of carrying twelve Miles over land, and dragging up the rapid and shallow stream of the River Sorell, a number of Vessels of various sizes and constructions to form a great Naval Armament, was carried into execution and completed with great exertions of ingenuity and labour, in the space of three months.

[Extract] Portsmouth 5th August 1776

My Friend – Your favo'r of the 22d ult is now before me, in which you mention the number of Men, that are to be allowed each Ship, and that they must be shipped for One Year, or more, this is the very first of my knowing these two matters – I am very impatient to know my Department as we may Expect some prizes bro't in by the Schooners, every Day, in that Case I should not be able to Act. if there is only to be one Agent let me Know it, & also inform General Washington, that Orders may be given to those Armed Vessels employed by the Continent, to call on me for Supplies, and deliver Prizes &c. I understand that Captain Bradford the Agent for Prizes for Massachusetts has the direction of those Armed Vessells. I hope it is only meant while in that Coloney. when they are in this Colony, I hope the Agent here, will have as much Power as the Massachusetts this you'll look into, as I think there are some Schemes on foot to keep every thing in their own hands, by no means let the Agent of any Colony have it in their power to order Continental Vessels to Cruize where he pleases, and to bring the prizes into his own Colony when other Harbours are more handy, pray dont fail to see this matter done immediately that there might not be any interference of Agents it is very Odd that the President does not Signify to me my Appointment, and what I am to do, all this time I am Agent and other People doing the Business, I mean of what comes in now since my Appointment, it is not so when any one appointed for the other Colony –

You say you tho't I had ample power, to fit the Ship for Sea I tho't the [Marine] Committee meant so, but it was impossible for me to prevail on them to say so, and therefore could not Act upon Uncertainties – It is very unaccountable that Governor [Stephen] Hopkins will say the Ships at Providence are as foward as this, when he has not seen neither. I have myself seen both, and when its certain we have waited since first of June for Guns to go on withall and those at Providence not a Mast made, or Tops, and the Ships tho' Launched not more than three Quarters or two thirds done at this time now these things are fact, for which you have my word, which I hope is equal to Mr. Hopkins's, and if that will not do, can produce Thousands of Witnesses, by our not having the first Guns, and proper attention paid our Ship the Continent have lost full as much as would pay for the whole 13 Sail, however things will go on Just so, it is hard that we can't have Orders for some of them Carbines which were taken for our Marines they are the proper Guns, only 100 would do very well, I suppose the Ship to find all Arms of all sort . . .

Pray what Wages had the Master builders at Phila who built the Ships P Day? am glad the Officers are appointed agreeable to Memo—as some of them have been Employed on board . . .

Newport Mercury, MONDAY, AUGUST 5, 1776

Newport, August 5.

Last Friday se'nnight a sloop from Bermuda arrived at Nantucket, who the day before, to the southward of that island, saw 53 sail of square rigged vessels, standing to the westward; which, 'tis likely, are part of the Hessian fleet.

Last Wednesday arrived at New-London, the sloop Betsey, Capt. Benjamin Bigelow, in 15 days from St. Eustatia, with a large quantity of duck, 6 tons of powder, some small arms, &c. Mr. William Turner, of this island, came passenger in the above vessel, and informs that a large number of troops have lately arrived at Martinica and 9000 at Porterica.

Last Monday morning two brigs went up the east side of the island; one of which is an Antiguaman, loaded with sugar, rum and cotton, sent in by the privateer Diamond, Capt. Chase, but had been taken before by Capt Newman, of Philadelphia, and was taken again by Capt. Chase, because she had no copy of Capt. Newman's commission on board.[1] – The other brig is a whaleman, which is released.

CAPTAIN JAMES WILKINSON TO CAPTAIN RICHARD VARICK, ALBANY [1]

let me inform you my Dear Sir that Genl Arnolds Character has been here traduced lately in the most villainous assasign like manner, and I understand the aspersions prevail with you. allow me then to obey the Dictates of justice, by asserting that I have been a spectator of His Conduct in the Hour of Danger, in the Moment of Gay Security have observed His exertions where the public Interest was concerned & have always found Him, the intrepid, generous friendly, upright Honest Man—is it for Men, who cant boast more than an easy enjoyment of the Continental Provision, to blast the Reputation of Him, who having encountered the greatest perils, surmounted extremest hardships, fought and bled in a Cause which they have only encumbered? No forbid it Honor, forbid it Justice – these are effusions of a Heart actuated by no partial Tie or prejudiced View. –

We have an Acct from Canada (which wants confirmation) that the Enemy had left St Johns with their Artillery, all to two hundred Men who remain in the Garrison, and this in consequence of the Arrival of a French Fleet – whether this is a Fact, whether it is meant only as a Decoy or whether they have drawn their Force from this, in order to penetrate the Country in a different Quarter is the Question. We understand that in attempting to bring several Vessels into the Lake from Chamblee the Carriages failed and they were destroyed – that they had continued their old mode of Tyranny in such a Degree as again to establish the Canadians Our Friends, and that the foreigners deserted in great Numbers to the back settlements or Country.

Our Navy are in great forwardness but I seriously believe we shall have no other use for them than to transport our Army into Canada. –

GEORGE WASHINGTON TO JOHN HANCOCK [1]

[Extract] New York, August 5, 1776.

The inclosed copy of a Letter from Col: [Benjamin] Tupper, who had the General Command of the Gallies here, will inform Congress of the Engagement between them and the Ships of War up the North river on Saturday Evening and of the Damage we sustained; what injury was done to the Ships I cannot ascertain. It is said they were hulled several times by our Shot. All accounts agree, that our Officers and Men, during the whole of the Affair, behaved with great Spirit and bravery; the damage done to the Gallies shews beyond question, that they had a warm time of it, the Ships still remain up the river and before any-thing further can be attempted against them, should it be thought advisable, the Gallies must be repaired. . . .

By a Letter from General Ward of the 29th. Ulto, he informs me, that two of our armed Vessels the day before had brought into Marblehead, a Ship bound from Halifax to Staten Island, she had in about 1509 £ Cost of British Goods, besides a good many belonging to Tories. A Hallifax paper found on board her, I have inclosed, as also an Account sent me by Mr. [Ebenezer] Hazard transmitted him by some of his Friends, as given by the Tories taken in her; their Intelligence I dare say is true, respecting the arrival of part of the Hessian Troops. General Ward in his Letter mentions the day this prize was taken, Capt. [William] Burke, in another of our Armed Vessels had an engagement with a Ship and a Schooner which he thought were Transports and would have taken them, had it not been for an unlucky accident in having his Quarter Deck blown up. Two of his men were killed and several more were wounded.[2]

The Hulks and three Cheveaux de frieze that have been preparing to obstruct the Channel, have got up to the place they are intended for, and will be sunk as soon as possible.

Robert Smith to the Pennsylvania Council of Safety [1]

Gentlemen,

I am now ready to raise a Number of frames, But the depth of water oposite to where we have framed them, is not sufficient to bear them off, we must go lower down. The water there is deeper, but we have not room enough on the Beach to raise them, I wo'd therefore propose that a Number of Labourers should be set to work at a gully that has been made in the Bank by the rains that has fallen from time to time, to enlarge this gap, that we may have room to lay the floors at a sufficient distance from the water, till we can erect the upper works in order to add weight that the tide may not Carry them off before we have finished the frame.

Mr Hicks tells me that he cannot employ the Labourers under his care at the fort, before they are discharged. Supose you should order him to set twenty-five or thirty of those People on this service, and put him in a way how they are to be vituald; there is Lodging ready near the place for 312 men, there they may sleep. I Beg, Gentlemen, that this may be attended to, otherways I shall be hindered much, and the public business will lag behind. I am, Gentlemen, [&c.]

CAPTAIN ANDREW SNAPE HAMOND, R.N., TO HANS STANLEY[1]

Dear Sir, Roebuck in Virginia 5th Augst 1776

You hear seldom from me for want of opportunitys to write to you, and because I have nothing material to acquaint you with. The history of a defensive kind of war, which has been my misfortune for some time past to have been engaged in, is painful for me to relate, and would give you no pleasure to read. In short, the support & protection that I have been under the absolute necessity of giving to Lord Dunmore & his floating Town, consisting of a Fleet of upwards of 90 Sail, destitute of allmost every material to Navigate them, as well as seamen, has given full employment for three Ships, for these three month past, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Enemy; and had we to deal with People the least enterprizing, we should not have been able to have done it so long. However this inconvenience is now nearly at an end, as I am sending all that is able & in a condition to go to Sea to St Augustine, after having destroyd about twenty sail, and put the people that inhabited them into other Vessels. We shall then be much more at liberty to act offensively against the Enemy than we hitherto have been, which if we had a sufficient force to do might be done to great advantage, as on Account of the Navigable Rivers of this Country, there is no part of the continent where ships can assist land operations more than in this. But unfortunately my Lord Dunmores Troops have been so few in number, such a motley set, and so full of disease, that it has been totally impossible to do or attempt any thing of consequence; and our whole exploits have amounted to nothing more than burning & destroying Houses on the Banks of the Rivers, and taking the Cattle off the Farms; which decides nothing. Whenever a Thousand Men can be spared, properly equipt, for the service of this Colony, with eight or 10 sail of small Ships to act with them, they may distress the Colonys of Maryland & Virginia to the greatest degree, and employ more than ten times their numbers to watch them.

I say nothing to you about what is going on at head Quarters, as from a want of small Vessels for Packets, our communication and correspondence with each other is less frequent than you can possibly imagine. I hope that defect will be supplied us from home, as we cannot here get proper Vessels, and if we could, we should want both Guns & Men for them; and without them we shall never be able to stop the kind of Trade the Rebels mean to carry on during the Winter, which is to be done in fast sailing Pilot Boats, and caried on from the small inlets on the Coast, where our Ships will not be able to get near them; and to confess the truth, I am clearly of opinion that unless we can withhold the foreign supplys from getting into the Country, this is likely to be a very tedious war. The Troops in these two Colonys have scarcely a second shirt, and their Coats are allready in Rags, so that they will certainly feel great distress next winter. They however talk largely of resources within themselves, but, upon my word, from the best authority I can get, the fact is much other ways.

I have the pleasure to tell you that since the Congress have declared themselves independant states, there is a spirit of loyalty broke out in the lower Counties of the Delaware and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, which properly managed & cultivated may turn to a very good account. It seems they have long had divisions among them on religious accounts, and the Churchmen are clearly of opinion that it is the Presbyterians that have brought about this revolt, and aim at getting the government of America into their hands, which they (the Churchmen) are rather determined to die than submit to. These Friends are numerous, and inhabit a Country that forms a Peninsula, by the Chesepeak Bay on one side and the R. Delaware on the other, which from water to water is only about twelve miles. Whenever an Attack is made upon Philadelphia, which I hope will not long be delayed, these People declare they will assist; and want only arms & ammunition (which the other party have by degrees got from them) to do it by themselves.

In the beginning of the Year I sent to Admiral Shuldham to ask for such a force to be sent to me, that would authorize me to make an attempt to clear the passage of the Delaware and an attack upon the Town, which at that time was very defenceless. By unfortunate and unavoidable delays, it was the end of April before I received his answer. He agreed with me, he sayed, in every article of my request, but from the distress of the Army, which had obliged them to evacuate Boston, no troops could be sent to assist me, nor was there a cohorn or Howitzer in store. Upon this, I gave up all thoughts, as you may conclude, of attacking so formidable a pass; but being desirous of reconnoitring the River, and seeing a little what the thing was, to enable me the better to proceed when a force should arrive, I took the Liverpool with me and sailed up the River within a few miles of their Chevaux de frizes, as they call them, which are immense frames of thick wood, sunk with Ballast in a narrow part of the River, defended by batterys on each side, and a floating one in the middle; together with 13 Row Galleys, each carrying one Gun, from a thirty two pounder, to an eighteen pounder, and from Seventy to fifty Men.

As soon as the Enemy perceived that we had stoped, and were busyly employed in filling out empty water Casks, they sent all the armd craft down to attack us, and brought with them a Vessel fitted as a fire ship for the purpose of destroying us. We met them under sail (as the Tide ran too rapid to ride with a spring upon the Cable) and lay under the disadvantage of being obliged to engage them at the distance they chose to fix on, which was scarcely within point blank shot: and being such low objects on the water, it was with some difficulty that we could strike them; so that we fired upon them near two hours before they thought proper to retire & row off.

unfortunately at this juncture the Roebuck grounded and being high-water, could not be got off 'till 4 the next morning, but as it was soft mud, the ship did not receive the least damage.

It was then so thick a fogg, that nothing could be discerned 'till about 8 o'Clock, when it clear'd up, and we perceived the Galleys at Anchor about 3 Miles above us. The wind had changed and now blew up the River, and we pursued them imediately with all our sails; and they as industriously avoided us by plying their oars & sails. This Chace lasted only about two hours, when it fell so little wind, that we were not able to stem the tide of ebb, and not having six inches water more than the Ship drew in the best of the Channel (which was not above a quarter of a Mile wide, though the River from bank to bank was about a Mile & half) I was under the necessity of Anchoring.

The Galleys rowed to a point of land on the western shore & anchored also.

When I found there was no prospect of bringing them to a close engagement, but that they meant to retire as I advanced, and not having a force sufficient with me to make an attack upon the chevaux de Frize, I found it would answer no good purpose to go further up the River, which every mile made more intricate; but it was best to try if we could draw the Galleys down to a wider part of the River, where we should be in less danger of getting aground, when we could run near them and have a better chance for destroying them. Accordingly when the ebb tide made, about 5 in the afternoon, we got under way and turned down the River with an easy sail; The Galleys with their former attendants, encreased by several large Launches, with each a Cannon in their Bow, imediately followed us, and kept up a smart fire, but cautiously remained at their usual distance. This gave me great hopes, I should be able to draw them into a wider part of the River, but about 10 at Night they thought proper to stop near New Castle. when I found I could not get them any further I anchored also for the Night, intending to pursue them again at day light, which when I attempted to do, they run again up the River; at least those that we saw did, which was only 11 sail; the rest I conclude were disabled: but have never to this hour been able to get an exact account of what they suffered.

after waiting in their Neighbourhood three days, finding there was no prospect of getting them down, and having fully executed all I had in View in going up the River, and entirely repaired the very little damage they did us, I came down the River, and finding letters from the Admiral acquainting me that Sir Peter Parker was gone to Attack Charles Town: I imediately intended sailing to join him thinking the Roebuck could be of more use there than to remain cruizing off the Delaware. However in this I was dissapointed for when I came of[f] the Capes of Virginia, I received such an Account of Lord Dunmore's situation, as obliged me to look in upon him, wher[e] I found I had just arrived in Time to save him out of the hands of the Rebels.

Before this letter reaches you I conclude you will have heard of the ill success of the unfortunate expedition; on which I shall make no comments, but least you may have heard the story imperfectly send you the General's letter. These little miscarriages I trust will have a good effect in the end. Englishmen allways ralley when things are at the worst, and I have not the least doubt but our Affairs at the end of the Campaign will wear a better aspect than they do at present. One thing I must own astonishes me, which is the astonishing delay the Troops have made in getting out here. They arrive now in the very worst season. The Heat of these two months is more than an Inhabitant of the northern parts of the World can endure, and an Army acting here should go into Summer Quarters, as well as winter ones.

The letter you did me the honor to write to me in January, came to me about two months ago, and made me extreamly happy; as I ever shall be to hear of your health & wellfare, events that I can never be indifferent about, while I have breath to draw.

The Vessel that carry this is now getting under sail therefore am under the necessity of concluding it. Pray give my kindest love to Mr Sloane & his family Pon Brewer & all Friends.

I allways am my Dr Sr with the sincerest attachment [&c.]

GOVERNOR PATRICK TONYN TO THE COMMANDING OFFICER OF THE BRITISH SHIPS IN SAVANNAH RIVER [1]

(Copy)

Sir, An expedition against this Province being preparing, by all accounts in Carolina and Georgia, a part of the operations is to be carried on by the inland Navigation.

Cockspur situation will not prevent a communication between Savannah and South Carolina, from whence several Vessels have lately passed laden with Indigo, and have been shipped on Board a fast sailing Vessel at Savannah, which has proceeded down a Creek called the St Augustine passage. A Vessel lately which had eight thousand pounds sterling of Indigo on Board made this passage, and is gone to the foreign Islands; since the middle of June three Vessels with Rice have done the same, and are gone to a foreign Market.

This has induced me to send you the inclosed sketch, which will shew the Situation, the Rebels take the opportunity of a dark night to make the passage. –

For the enterprize intended against this Province Row Boats to carry Cannon in the Bow an eighteen pounder, four of these Boats I know are building at Beaufort, two at Savannah, and several in other parts. A privateer is fitting out at Sunbury, and other armed Vessels are equipping in the different Creeks in Georgia. –

Six Vessels are dayly expected to slip into some of the Ports on the Coast of Georgia from the Islands, they have supplies for the Rebels.

Mr Thomas Young a Gentleman of large Property in Georgia, was strongly recommended to me as a loyal Subject, he obtained two or three protections from me for his Vessel to supply His Majestys Islands with Provisions, under the sanction of his recommendation, and loyalty to His Majesty. I hear since he has also procured protections from the Rebel Congress for his Vessels, and his motives are to supply the Rebels. I hope you will let this circumstance be known to all His Majestys Ships under your Command, that proper search may be made in any Vessel belonging to Mr Thomas Young that comes in their way. –

The Pensacola and Jamaica Packet is arrived here, Lieut: Clark [Arthur Clarke] who commands her informs me that some Rebel Cruisers have been in the Keys to the Southward of this Province, this should be made known to any of the King's Ships that may be passing in those parts.

If we can here be of any use to any of the Ships at Cockspur you have only to command it, I shall be happy to render you all the Service in my power. –

Sir Peter Parker having added to the station at Cockspur the Active and Sphynx, I hope you will be enabled to have some Success against these frequenters of the Georgia Coast, and extend your Cruising to this Province, particularly to St Mary's River—Wishing you all success—I am Sir [&c.]

Vice Admiral Clark Gayton to Philip Stephens [1]

Sir Antelope Jamaica August 5th 1776

I beg leave to acquaint their Lordships that His Majestys Ship Pallas was to have Sail'd the 26th of last Month with near a hundred Sail of the Trade had not an intend'd general Insurrection of the Negroes been discovered, which oblig'd the Governor with the advice of his Council to lay a general Embargo on the Shipping, to establish Martial Law, & to request me, to keep the Ships under my Command in Port for the safety & protection of the Island which I comply'd with.

On the 3d instant he inform'd me that as the Season of the Year was so far advanc'd; it might be attend'd with great loss to the Trade detaining them any longer should a Hurricane happen; and that as the Measures which had been taken prov'd so effectual in suppressing this Rebellion (which I apprehend was to have been General throughout the Island) he had with the advice of his Council taken off the Embargo, but stil thought it necessary to continue Martial Law for some time longer, and requesting that the Atalanta & Racehorse; might not be recall'd from the North Side of the Island, where I had instantly dispatch'd them on the first account of this Rebellion and given their Commanders directions to give every Assistance in their Power to quell the same.

I have therefore order'd Captain [William] Cornwallis to Sail the 6th inst for Bluefields, to remain their Forty eight Hours to give the Trade time to compleat their Water after being detain'd so long and then to proceed with them into the English Channel agreeable to my former orders. I have order'd the Maidstone to go with him but have desir'd that as soon as ever he judges the Convoy to be in Safety to make her Signal to seperate and have order'd Captain [Alan] Gardner to return with all possible dispatch & join me here as the Governor & Council have request'd me to keep the Ships in Port as much as possible for the safety and protection of the Island, as they are still apprehensive of the Negroes taking the Advantage of their absence to rise.

As the West Florida Sloop is ready to Sail, and I judge it of great concequence her getting on her Station in the Lakes of the Mississippi I have order'd Captain Cornwallis to take her under his Command as she might be of Service in going through the Gulph with the Convoy and then to make her Signal to Seperate to go to Pensacola, all which I hope will meet with their Lordships approbation.

I beg leave to acquaint them that His Majestys Ship Antelope arriv'd the 27th of last Month after having seen the Trade in Safety, she brought in two American Sloops,[2] one with Rice the other with Lumber which is a great acquisition to the Island those Articles being much want'd.

I further beg leave to acquaint their Lordships that I have given Mr Thomas Lloyd a Commission appointing him Master & Commander of the Atalanta (in the room of Captain Underwood Deceased) and have order'd him to be Borne as a Supernumerary on board the Antelope 'til her arrival I have likewise given Mr Thomas Cadogan the Second Lieutt a Commission for First and have appoint'd Mr Chas Holmes Everitt, Second, and Mr James Cotes to be Lieutenant of the Porcupine Schooner, and Inclosed is a list of Officers Made, with the State & Condition of His Majestys Ships & Vessels under my Command for their Lordships information.

In the latter part of my Letter of the 2d July, I inform'd their Lordships of my having purchas'd a fine Brigg of near 130 Tons Burthen, & that she & the Racehorse were capable of bearing Masters & Commanders, with proper Officers & Eighty Men, submitting it to their Consideration puting them on that Establishment, which I beg leave to say I think would be great use; as the Americans have a Number of Arm'd Vessels superior to those, with their present Complements. I am, with respect Sir [&c.]

CAPTAIN WILLIAM CORNWALLIS, R. N., TO PHILIP STEPHENS [1]

Pallas, Port Royal, Jamaica
5th August 1776.

When I was at Cape Coast I received information that there was an American Brig in the River Gabon with Arms and Ammunition on board; I fell in with Captain Warren in His Majesty's Sloop Weasel at Accra and detached him to the said River, and as I imagined a small Vessel would be necessary to examine the River, I ordered Lt Bray of his Majestys Ship under my Command on board a Prize of the Atalanta's to accompany Capt Warren. Lieut Bray has since joined the Pallas and acquainted me they had seized the Brig and carried her to Antigua I am Sir [&c.]

WILLIAM BINGHAM TO SILAS DEANE [1]

[Extract] St. Pierre August 5th 1776

Sir The Committee of Secret Correspondence having honor'd me with the Appointment of their Agent in the West Indies to transact their Affairs, both in the commercial & political Line, have instructed me to inform you of it, & to cooperate with you in giving them constant Intelligence & Advice concerning every Matter that may be connected with the Interest or improved to the Advantage of the United Colonies. And as frequent opportunities present from this Place to the different Ports in France as well as America, they are very desirous that we should maintain a regular, frequent & well serv'd Correspondence, in order that both they & you may be duly & reciprocally informed of every interesting Event that may be passing on either side of the Water, for which Purpose I shall endeavor to obtain a correct & extensive Knowledge of the Affairs of my Department. I shall examine & inform myself of everything I see or hear that is relative to the Situation or Interest of America, & shall transmit you by every opportunity the Result of my Enquiries & Observations.

The Committee desire that "You will address your Current Despatches to me under Cover to the General, but when you have any particular Matters to communicate, either to Congress, themselves, or me, that you think should not be risqued thro that Channel for fear of Inspection, that you would procure a Mercht in France to put such Despatches directly for me under Cover to a Mercht in Martinico, with an express Injunction to deliver them into my own Hands. But as soon as I had made Acquaintance with an established Merchant of good Reputation in Martinico, that I had best name him to you, that you may so address your Despatches without the Intervention of a Merchant in France" You will therefore plan to direct them to Monsr P Begorrat Negotiant au St Pierre, Martinique, pour remettre a Monsr Bingham de Philadelphie. . . .

From the Reception I have met with from the General, I have the greatest Reason to believe that France is very favorably disposed towards America. He has informed me that by a Frigate which had just arrived, he had received some Dispatches of a very important Nature from his Court. That his Orders were to favor the Americans throughout all their Ports & protect their Commerce at Sea, whenever & wherever they should find an opportunity.

The Continental Sloop of War the Reprisal of 16 Guns, & one of the Ministerial Fleet the Shark of the same Weight of Metal, but better man'd, have lately had an Engagement opposite the Port of St Pierre. I was a Spectator of the whole of it from on shore.[2] And to the honor of America, the Reprisal damaged the Shark so much, that She was forced to sheer off in order to refit, when the Fort fired upon her & put an End to the Engagement. Never did I feel the Sensation of Joy in a more lively Degree, than upon viewing the different Treatment which the two Commanders met with from the Inhabitants of St Pierre; Capt [Lambert] Wickes was complimented & caressed beyond measure, whereas Capt [John] Chapman was under the necessity of procuring a Guard of Six Men to protect him from the Insults of the Mob . . .

Since writing the above his Excellency has done me the Favor to show me a Letter he has just received from Admiral Young sent express by the Pomona Sloop of War. He therein demands in the Name of the King his Master, that these American Pirates (as he stiles the Reprisal & her Crew,) that have taken Refuge in the Harbor of Fort Royal, may be delivered to him, in order that they may be brought to Tryal & proceeded against accordingly; & calls the Protection given them a gross Insult offered to the British Flag & with his Excellencys Acquiescence. he mentions that he shall dispatch a Ship of War immediately to London, with his Excellencys Answer, which is as spirited & animated as we could wish or the occasion require; Prudential Reasons would not admit of his saying more, but he refuses his request in a categorical decisive Stile.

2. Bingham came as a passenger in the Reprisal from Philadelphia. He must have been landed, probably at Pointe du Prêcheur, before the engagement.

Journal of Lieutenant John Trevett [1]

[June 22 to August 6]

We carried w[ith] us one of the bills, which the Hon. President received with pleasur[e] [2] We tarried one day longer than we needed, on the account of seeing Independance declared, which was on the 4th day of July 1776.[3] The next day we set out for New York, on our way for Rhode Island When we arrived at Newport, we went immediately on board the privateer which was lying in the harbour of New Port, we brought dispatches for Capt. [Nicholas] Biddle, whom we had the pleasure of finding on board, we found they had made a short cruise since we were taken, and had captured one Jamaica Ship, but being chased hard by a British Frigate, they ran her on shore at Fisher's Island reef, and lost the Ship, and all her sugars, but saved 100 puncheons of rum, sails & stores, which were sent to Mr. Nathaniel Shaw of New London, who was appointed Agent, and Capt. Biddle gave me my share of prize money, which I received from Mr. Shaw, so ends this Cruise.

1. Trevett's Journal, NHS.
2. Trevett and the prize crew from the recaptured transport Oxford had arrived at Williamsburg on June 21. Trevett recorded: "I drew a bill on the Hon. John Hancock, then President for the cash we received from the State of Virginia," ibid.
3. The Declaration of Independence was not publicly announced in Philadelphia, until July 6, 1776, when it was read by Thomas Mifflin in the square before the state house. Trevett's departure from Philadelphia was probably on July 12, 1776, as Charles Biddle, writing to his brother Nicholas on July 11, stated: "some of your Men are here Waiting for you," Nicholas Biddle Papers, HSP.

COLONEL THOMAS THOMAS TO GEORGE WASHINGTON [1]

from the scituation of the Men of Warr and Tenders now opposite this place in Hudson's River think it my duty as Commanding officer here to Inform your Excellency of the Advantageous scituation of the Ground here for placing some Cannon to play upon the shipping whilst Attacked by our Gallies; the Cannon may beplaced upon an Eminence within near half a Mile of the shipping, and if your Excellency should think the above plan Expedient, an Engineer might be Necessary to form abreast work for three or four peices of Cannon which I beg your Excellency in that case will Order up with the Necessary Apparatus and Intrenching Tools – I Conceive shall be able to collect a sufficient Number of men with those allready under my Command here to throw up abreast work in a very short time in an Evening after planned by an Engineer – should your Excellency think this Advisable it may be Necessary to Order the Commodore of the Gallies to postpone an Attack upon the shipping untill a proper breast work is thrown up, in case his Orders should oblige an Attack sooner—I dont pretend to dictate to your Excellency but only take the Liberty of stating the above for your Excellency's Consideration with which I would wish your Excellency's Indulgence.

CAPTAIN ANDREW SNAPE HAMOND, R. N., TO CAPTAIN GEORGE MONTAGU, H. M. S. Fowey [1]

Roebuck at the Capes of Virginia
Sir the 6th Augt 1776.

The Sickly and weak State of the Troops under Lord Dunmores command, as well as the bad condition of the Transports have determined His Lordship and my self to proceed with them to New York; being clearly of opinion that remaining within the Capes without power of Acting against the Rebels only tends to bring disgrace on his Majesty's Arms, and give Spirits to the enemy.

It is therefore my direction to you, that you remain with His Majesty's Ship under your command on this station, and use your utmost endeavours to prevent any of the Rebel Vessels from getting in or out of the Capes, and in every other respect to annoy the Enemy by every means in your power. I have left my Tender the Pembroke to cruize with you, but as Soon as you are joined by the Otter, or any other Ship or vessel of War, It is my desire that you dispatch her to me imediately at New York and give me an account of every thing that may happen in my Absence from Virginia which I flatter my self will not be above 14 days at farthest.

I am much concerned at the Shortness of your water, but imagine by the assistance of the Tender you will be able to get some small Supplies from Smith's Island, so as not to be obliged to go off the Station untill relieved by some other Ship. I am, Sir [&c.]

GOVERNOR PATRICK TONYN TO CAPTAIN THOMAS BISHOP, H. M. S. Lively [1]

(Copy)

Sir, I beg leave to inclose a copy of intelligence just now come It being also confirmed to yourself by Lieutenant Grant of His Majestys Schooner St John—

Considering it a fortunate circumstance that His Majesty's Ship Lively under your Command is at this time in this Province, and being confident that His Majesty's Service on an extensive and general view is the true object of your Conduct, I therefore hope you will not think this requisition incompatible with the orders you may be under from the Admiral—

The St. John Schooner of four Guns being the only aid in the maritime department, except an armed Vessel fitted out by Letter of Reprisal now in this harbour, and Lord William Campbell's Schooner that arrived at the same time with the Lively—

As you are informed of the present situation of the St. John and His Majesty's Troops in St. Mary's River, I have directed the Sloop Captain Osborne Commander and the Schooner Lady William Captain Gickie Commander to put themselves under your Command—

With this force you will give me leave to request of you to proceed with all imaginable dispatch with His Majesty's Ship Lively to St.

Marys River in order to support His Majesty's Schooner and Troops in those parts against all attempts made by the Georgia Rebels, and I further beg that the utmost efforts may be put in force against these invaders of this Province and His Majesty's wise Government—

I trust you will take upon you on your arrival at St. Marys or with His Majesty's forces to give such orders and Commands as you may think fit for the general benefit of this Province consistent with the circumstances of events— I have the honor to be with the greatest respect Sir [&c.]

MAJOR GENERAL HORATIO GATES'S ORDERS TO BRIGADIER GENERAL BENEDICT ARNOLD [1]

Upon your Arrival at Crown-Point you will proceed with the Fleet with [sic of] the United States under your Command, down Lake Champlain to the narrow Pass of the Lake, made by the Split Rock; or to the other narrow Approach, down the Lake made by Isle-aux-Tetes, and the opposite Shore. You will Station the Fleet in the best Manner, to maintain the Possession of those Passes, according as your Judgment shall determine, cautiously avoiding to Place the Vessels in a Manner which might unnecessarily expose them to the Enemy's heavy Artillery, from the Shore.

You will most religiously observe that it is my positive Order, that you do not command the Fleet to Sail below the Pass of the Isle-aux-Tetes above mentioned, incessantly reflecting, that the Preventing the Enemys invasion of our Country, is the ultimate End of the important Command, with which you are now intrusted. It is a defensive War we are carrying on; therefore, no wanton risque, or unnecessary Display of the Power of the Fleet, is at any Time, to influence your Conduct. Should the Enemy come up the Lake, and attempt to force their Way through the Pass you are stationed to defend in that Case you will act with such cool determined Valour, as will give them Reason to repent their Temerity. But if, contrary to my Hope and Expectation, their Fleet should have so encreased, as to force an entrance into the upper Part of the Lake then after you shall have discovered the Insufficiency of every Effort to retard their Progress, you will, in the best Manner you can, retire with your Squadron, to Ticonderoga. Every Vessel in the Fleet, being furnished with a Batteau, you will have it in your Power to Keep out Scout Boats at Night, and occasionally to annoy the Enemys small Craft. In the Day Time, your Boats can act, when Opportunity offers, under Cover of the Cannon of the Fleet.

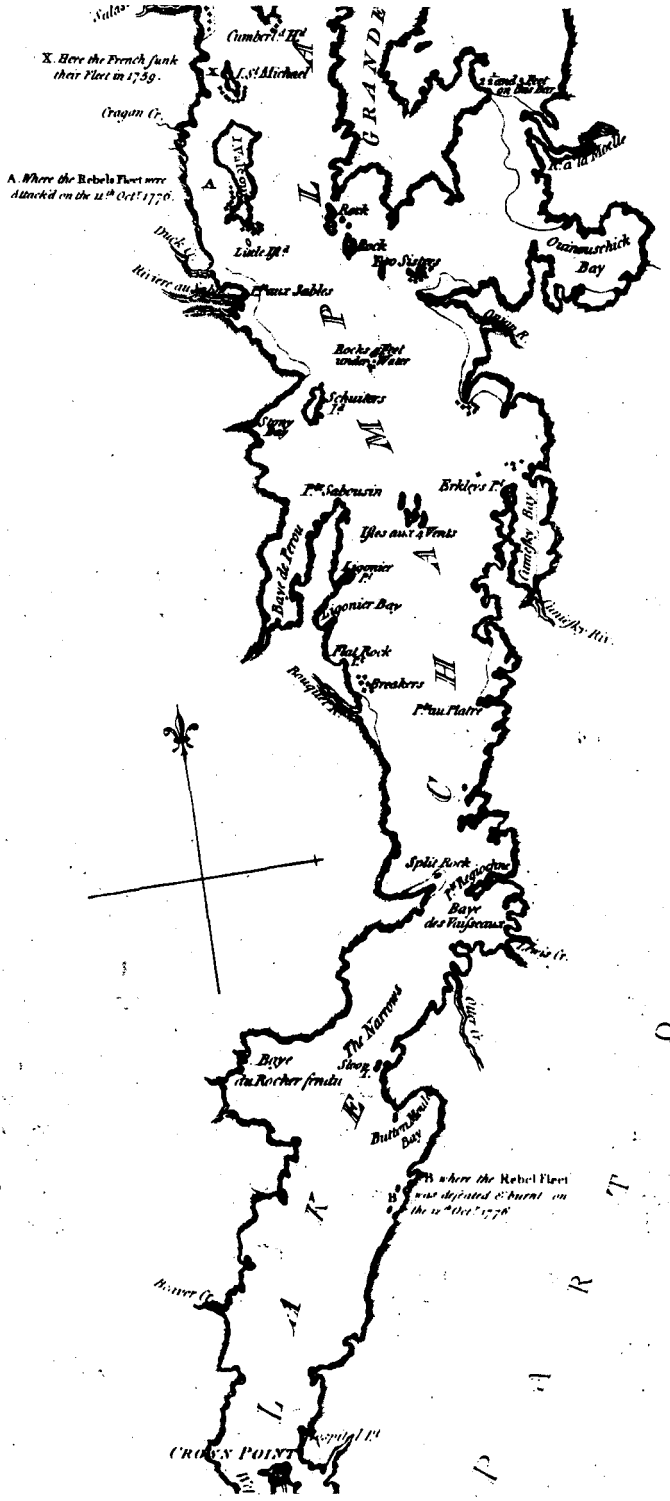
As the most Honourable the Congress of the United States, rest a great Dependence on your Wise and prudent Conduct, in the Management of this Fleet, you will on no Account, detach yourself from it, upon the lesser Services, above mentioned. A resolute, but judicious Defence of the Northern Entrance into this Side of the Continent, is the momentous Part, which is committed to your Courage and Abilities. I doubt not you will secure it from further Invasion.

As I am entirely unacquainted with martime Affairs, I shall not presume to give any Directions, respecting the Duty and Discipline of the Seamen and Marines, on board the Fleet. I have traced the great Outline of that Service, which your Country expects from the Rank and Character you have acquired.

I have, as is my Duty, fixed the Limits, beyond which you are not to go; But you must communicate that Restriction to nobody. I wish, on the Contrary, that Words, occasionally dropped from you, with that Prudence which excludes every Sort of Affectation, and which, I believe, you possess, may, together with all your Motions, induce our own People to conclude it is our real Intention to invade the enemy; which, after all, may happen. It will keep up their Spirits, without affecting your Reputation, whatever may be the Event.

It only remains for me to recommend you to the Protection of that Power upon whose Mercy we place our Hopes of Freedom here, and of Happiness hereafter.

You will frequently report the State and Situation of your Fleet, and of every interesting Occurrence.



Given at Ticonderoga, this 7th Day of August 1776. –

BRIGADIER GENERAL BENEDICT ARNOLD TO MAJOR GENERAL HORATIO GATES [1]

Dear General Skensborough Augt 7th 1776

I found on my arival here last evening, the Gallies much forwarder than I expected, three will be launched in a Fortnight, if not sooner & Timber is Cutt For three or four others, the Carpenters are Very Industrious, & spirited, nothing will Retard the building but want of Plank, & Iron, I have wrote Capt. Varick to hurry on the Latter, & have ordered the Carpenters to omit building more Gondalos than those on the Stocks—as they take a large quantity of Plank, & retard the Building of the Gallies, which are of more Consequence. One Gundalo will be Launched To morrow & the eighth & last in a few days—The Seamen will be Drawfted this afternoon, & to'morrow I hope to have the pleasure seeing you at Tyonderoga. GEORGE WASHINGTON TO JOHN HANCOCK [1]

[Extract] New York, August 7, 1776.

I have transmitted a Copy of a Letter from Mr. Jona. Glover, setting forth the nature and Grounds of a dispute between him and a Mr. [John] Bradford respecting their Agency.[2] Not conceiving myself Authorized, nor having the smallest inclination to interfere in any degree in the matter; It is referred to Congress, who shall determine and give direction upon it in such manner as they will Judge best. I will only observe, that Mr. Glover was recommended to me as a proper person for an Agent when we first fitted out Armed Vessels and was accordingly appointed one, and so far as I know, discharged his Office with fidelity and Industry.

GEORGE WASHINGTON TO JOHN HANCOCK [1]

Head Quarters, 1. OClock P. M., August 7, 1776.

Sir: Since closing the Letter which I had the honor to write you this Morning, two deserters have come in, who left the Solebay Man of War last Evening. – one of them is a Native of New York. Their Account is that they were in the Engagement with Col. Moultrie at Sullivan's Island on the 9th. July [sic]; the particulars they give nearly correspond with the narrative sent by General Lee; that they left Carolina 3 Weeks ago as a Convoy to 45 transports, having on board General Clinton, Lord [Charles] Cornwallis and the whole Southern Army, consisting of about 3000 Men, all of whom were landed last week on Staten Island, in tolerable Health.

That on Sunday 13 Transports part of [Richard] Howe's fleet and having on board Hessians and Highlanders, came to Staten Island: that the remainder of the Fleet which was reported to have in the whole 12000 Men; had parted with these Troops off the Banks of Newfoundland and were expected to come in every moment; that they were getting their heavy Carriages and Cannon on board; had launched 8 Gondolas with flat Bottoms, and 2 Rafts on Stages to carry Cannon. These men understand that the attack will soon be made, if the other Troops arrive; That they give out they will lay the Jerseys waste with Fire and Sword. The computed Strength of their Army will be 30,000 Men. They further add, that when they left Carolina one Transport got on Shore, so that they were not able to give her relief, upon which she surrendered with 5 Companies of Highlanders to General Lee, who after taking every thing valuable out of her brunt her

That the Admiral turned General Clinton out of his Ship after the Engagement, with a great deal of abuse; great differences between the Principal Naval and Military Gentlemen; that the Ships left in Carolina, are now in such a Weakly distressed condition they would fall an easy Prey. I am, etc.

P.S: The Ships are changing their position, and the Men of War forming into a Line but I still think they will wait the arrival of the remaining Hessians before any general attack will be made. Monday's return will shew our strength here.

Governor Josiah Martin to Lord George Germain [1]

On board The Sovereign Transport in the Narrows of New York Harbour
August 7th 1776.

My Lord,

Ihave the honour to acquaint Your Lordship that Iarrived on the 1st instant with General Clinton and his Division of the Army at this place, where I find all manner of preparation going forward for the great scene that is likely to be opened on this theatre; and which I most fervently hope will soon close with all honour and glory to the Vigour and spirit, and to the Wisdom and magnanimity of Britain's Councils.

I am to pray Your Lordships pardon for the omission of some advices in my Dispatches from North Carolina which Iought to have transmitted earlier. – The first My Lord regards the institution of a Court of Vice Admiralty in Cape Fear River, which in the course of its proceedings, took cognizance of prizes, brought into the Port, by the King's Ships of War, after the Act of Parliament prohibiting all trade with that Province, and most of the other Continental Colonies became known there; as well as of such as were brought in previously to the declaration of that law. but Iam to observe to Your Lordship, that most, if not all of the condemnations which passed, were founded on breaches of former Acts of Trade. the circumstances My Lord which led me to the measure of instituting a Court of Vice Admiralty at that period, Iflatter myself will justify it to Your Lordship, however it may seem, at first view, to militate against the intentions of the Act of Parliament before alluded to.

When General Clinton arrived in North Carolina in March, Provisions were extremely scarce on board The Ships there. At this time and soon afterwards, no prohibition then known, the Cruizers brought in Sundry American Vessels loaded with Rice bread and flour &c. all of which were locked up from use for want of some legal mode of proceeding against them. The Captors urged me to establish a Court of Vice Admiralty that their prizes might be brought to trial. The General saw it absolutely necessary that the Cargoes should be distributed for the immediate support of The Ship's Crews and the few Soldiers who were there, as well as the need there would be of such supplies when the number of mouths should increase by the arrival of the expected Armament from Ireland. The prohibitory Act of Parliament arrives while these matters were agitated. – Isaw My Lord that it contained no express restraint ofthe powers vested in me as His Majesty's Governor of that Province to constitute a Court of Vice Admiralty, while it bore a manifest interdict to the Captors to bring their prizes into the Ports of a Colony ofa description too corresponding with the then state of North Carolina. I represented this to the Captains of The King's Ships of War, who acknowledged they were forbid by the Act to bring Prizes into such Ports: Alleging on the other hand, that if following the letter of the Act, they were obliged to send their prizes to distant Ports, where they might be tried, they should unman their Ships, and render them unfit for service; and that as they confidently relied on the expediency, and necessity of the case for their indemnification, they wished to hazard the trial of their prizes in a Court of Vice Admiralty there. After mature consideration, being clearly of the opinion that the Act of Parliament did not restrain the jurisdiction of the Vice Admiralty Court; discerning no possible ill consequence from the condemnation and sale of Prizes at that Port, and seeing that the ends and objects of the Act of Parliament of preventing succour going to the Rebels were fully answered while the purchase of prizes and their Cargoes was necessarily confined to His Majesty's Fleet and Army, I gave into the measure of erecting a Court of Vice Admiralty, and that relief was afforded by it in a formal course of proceeding, which necessity must otherwise have compelled the Commander in Chief to take by the strong hand of power.

My next omission My Lord was the neglect formally to notify to Your Lordship that with the approbation of General Clinton I hired the Ship Jenny John McNeil Master of three hundred and ten Tons burthen for the reception and accommodation ofa number ofHis Majesty's faithfull subjects who fled to the Fleet in Cape Fear River for protection, and could not be otherwise provided for. of this circumstance My Lord Ishall think it proper at the present opportunity to advise The Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury and Ishall humbly hope that my conduct in both these cases will meet with Your Lordships approbation.

My best information since the unfortunate check of the Loyalists in North Carolina, (of which Ihad the honour to give Your Lordship the minutest detail then in my power in my Dispatch No. 1.) teaches me to think their good purpose was frustrated atlast by egregious misconduct; and that they would have made their way good, even in the small force they appeared, if they had been conducted with a little more prudence; the want of which cannot be enough lamented: more especially as expence to Government, was necessarily incurred, in the course of that unlucky business.

Ihave now My Lord the sore mortification to find my family inaccessible at only Twenty miles distance: but Itrust the time is at hand that will deliver them, and me from misery; my share of which, abstracted of the circumstances of my family's distress in a sort of Captivity, (that Your Lordship will believe have not been a little afflicting to me) Ileave to Your Lordship to compute, after observing, that I have now spent nearly fourteen months on board divers ships, under every possible disadvantage, and inconvenience. Ihave the honor [&c.]

Jo. Martin.

[On board H. M. S. Eagle]
Wednesday, 7th August.

A Rifleman, who got off from Long Island last night, was brought on board this Morning, and his Gun with him. It was of a handsome Construction, and entirely manufactured in America. As there are no Flints in this Country, they have smuggled them in from Holland & France.

The Orpheus & Greyhound, two Frigates sent out upon a Cruize, returned without seeing any thing of the Fleet, which gives much anxiety.[2]

A letter from Captain N. Biddle to the Marine Committee, was laid before Congress, and read; Whereupon,

Resolved, That the General [Washington] be directed to propose an exchange of Lieutenant [James] Josiah, by giving in exchange for him a lieutenant of the navy of Great Britain, and that the general remonstrate to Lord Howe on the cruel treatment Lieutenant Josiah has met with, of which the Congress have received undoubted information.[2]

Committee of Secret Correspondence of the Continental Congress to Silas Deane [1]

Dear Sir Philadelphia August 7th, 1776.

The Above is a Copy of our last, which went by the Dispatch Captain [Peter] Parker.[2]

The Congress have since taken into consideration the heads of a Treaty to be proposed to France, but as they are not yet concluded upon, we cannot say more of them per this conveyance.

You will see by the Newspapers which Accompany this, that the expedition against South Carolina is foiled by the gallant resistance made there. The Enemy, much diminished by Sickness, it is thought will attempt nothing farther in those parts. The people of North Carolina, Who at first had taken up their Bridges, and broken the Roads, to prevent the Enemy's penetrating their Country; have since, being ready to receive him, repaired the Roads and Bridges, and Wish him to Attempt making use of them.

Gen: Howe is posted now on Staten Island near New York, with the Troops he Carried to Halifax when he was driven out of Boston. Lord Howe is also arrived there with some reinforcements, and more are expected, as the great push seems intended to be Made in that Province.

Gen. Washington's Army is in possession of the Town, about which Many entrenchments are thrown up, so as to give an opportunity of disputing the possession with G: Howe, if he should attempt it, and of making it cost him something: but it is not so regularly fortified as to Stand a Siege. We have also a flying Camp in the Jerseys, to harass the Enemy if he should attempt to penetrate thro' that Province to Philada.

In the different Colonies we have now near 80.000 Men in the pay of the Congress. The Declaration of Independence Meets with universal approbation, and the people everywhere Seem more animated by it in defence of their Country. Most of our Frigates are Launched in the different Provinces, and are fitting for Sea with all the expedition in our power. They are fine Ships, and will be capable of good service. Our small Privateers and Continental arm'd Vessels have Already had great success as the papers will shew you: and by abstaining from Trade ourselves while we distress that of our enemy's, we expect to Make their Men of war weary of their unprofitable and hopeless Cruises, and their Merchants Sick of a Contest in which so much is Risk'd and Nothing gained. The forming a Navy is a very capital object with us, And the Marine Committee is ordered to bring in a Plan for increasing it very considerably. The Armed Boats for the defence of our Rivers and Bays grow More and More in repute. They Venture to attack large Men of War, and are very troublesome to them. The papers will give you Several instances of their success.

We hope that by this time you are at Paris, and that Mr [Thomas] Morris has joined you, whom we recommend to you Warmly, and desire you May Mutually co-operate in the Public Service. With great esteem We are Dear Sir [&c.]

"ANOTHER LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 7." [1]

Since my last, we have arrived, a sloop from North Carolina, with naval stores, and a sloop of 8 four pounders; she belonged to the Goodrich's, of Virginia, and was commanded by one of them; was out three days from Bermuda, when he discovered and gave chace to the brig Lexington, Captain Barry, but finding his mistake, put about, too late; for in about an hour and a half, Barry ran along side, when she struck. She has eight Negroes on board; all, or most of the men, to the amount of 25, entered on board of Barry.— [William] Goodrich is a prisoner on board the brig.[2]

This morning we have an express from a schooner taken by Capt. Weekes, in the continental ship Reprisal; he was bound from St. Vincents for Liverpool, with upwards of a hundred hogsheads of rum, and is safe at Absecomb Inlet. They bring an account of his having taken a ship of four or five hundred tons burthen, from Grenada for London; she was quite full and by the captors said to be worth 35,000 l. A ship was seen last Wednesday to the southward of our Cape, by the North-Carolina man, which we hope is the prize.[3]

Capt. Fowler in a sloop belonging to your city [New York], is arrived at Egg-Harbour with 4000 l. worth of indigo, in 12 or 13 days from Charlestown; she passed the fleet in a thunder storm –

Copy Off St Maries Barr 7th Augst 1776

Sir I had the honour to write you yesterday, inclosing the intelligence from Mr [John] Martin which I am sorry to Acquaint you is too true.– The Moment I received it I sent for [Stephen] Egan and desired him to take such measures as he thought best to Secure Lady Egmont's Property. As I proposed going off the Barr; At the same time sent an express to Captain Graham Unmoor'd, Weighed, and dropt down the Schooner to Amelia North End, and Anchor'd about a quarter of a Mile from the Shore—As soon as the Tide would permit I sent the Pilot and Midshipman in two Sailing boats to Assist Captain Graham—The Sloop and Pompey who got down to Egan's landing on Thursday Morning.

I wrote Captain Graham and have Sent you a Copy inclosed.[2] On which he came on board the St John I repeated the same request and much pressed of him a reinforcement of (20 Soldiers) also pressed him to embark the Troops in the St John, Governor's Sloop and Pompey, urged in that case we could make a resistance by being united, and prevent their landing on Amelia by placing them in such a Manner to prevent them passing Amelia Point—In Answer to which Captain Graham told me, he would Consult Egan and the Wrights—And give me an Answer in the afternoon, As the Ebb was made, and the Rebels Vessels expected to make their Appearance every Minute—I sent the Pilot in the afternoon to wait on Captain Graham, who brought me back word from him, that he would write me to Morrow Forenoon, (or if convenient) come himself, I kept the Schooner in the best Place and Position for defence she would Admit of and the boats Mann'd and Armed to reconnotre the Coast along Cumberland and Amelia Shore—at 9 (P M) my Officer called on Captain Graham, who was on board the Governor's Sloop, he told him that some of Wrights Negroes had returned from Lynch's Plantation near the No End of Cumberland Island, and said there was no Vessels to be seen in the Sound—at 4 (A M) saw a large flat resembling a Vessel cut down and made into a floating Battery, with one Mast and liberty Colours flying, full of Ports and a great Number of Men.—Hove Short, loaded the Guns with Round and grape Shot. Saw two More Vessels coming round Cumberland Point after the flat who was rowing and To[w]ed by other boats towards us—at 6 she came nigher us and fired 3 Shot which went past and near the Schooner—Weighed and fired a Shot at them.

It being quite calm got the boats ahead double Mann'd the Oars and with the utmost difficulty got her over the Barr—Saw the Rebel Schooner another Vessel and several boats go up Amelia North River—soon after saw a large Smoak and heard an Explosion supposed to be the Sloop set afire or blown up by Captain Graham, who I am positive will do everything in his power for the good of the Service and will take every Method to prevent the Troops from falling into the Hands of the Rebels—My fatigue and hurry will not permit me saying more on the Event—please to communicate my letters to Colonel [Augustine] Prevost and Captain [Thomas] Bishop I have sent them express into Nassau by Woodland the Pilot. I have the Honour to be Sir Your Excellency's [&c.]

GEORGE LOGAN TO SAMUEL LAWFORD [1]

[Extract] St Augustine August 7 1776 –

Dear Sir, I wrote you some Weeks ago by a vessel bound to Bristol, which I hope came safe to hand as it informed you of our safe Arrival at this place and of our Detention here, for want of a proper & good opportunity, but my Mother having applied to the Governor, he intends to send us in a Vessel of his own, part of the Way, which will facilitate our journey very much; so by the Politeness of the Governour, we may be able to get away in a few Days.—Since I wrote you, I must tell you that the Fleet destind to subdue So: Carolina has been totally defeated in the following Manner—the Bristol & Experiment each of 50 Guns, the Active, Actaeon , Solebay & Sphynx each of 28 and a Bomb were orderd to attack a fort on Sullivants Island about 4 Miles from Charles Town; the first fort they had to pass—Accordingly the pilot Sampson brought them too 800 yards from the Fort, a heavy fire commenced on both sides for 9 Hours, when at length the Bristol (Sr Peter Parker's Ship) having lost two of [her] Masts, her Captn & 60 Men killed & many wounded; the Experiment lost her Captain & 40 men killed and many wounded—And many Men in the other Vessels killed & wounded, they thought proper to sheer off with the Ebb Tide in the Evening in a most shattered Condition, and had it not been for want of powder of which the Provincials had not enought at the Fort, some of them must have been sunk, but they wasted Powder for two Hours, and they ran away during that Interval.—during the Action the Actaeon Frigate ran a shore and was burnt by order of the Admiral—This Fort was commanded by Colonel [William] Moultrie (Brother to the Lieutenant Governor of this place) and defended by 200 resolute Fellows, it mounts on the Front 30 twenty four Pounders, but the British Fleet was so situated that they could work but 15 of them, but it seems they managed these so well as to rend Destruction with every Shot—Before the Action General Clinton had landed 1400 Men on the Back of the Island in order to Attack the Fort in the rear, but [illegible] they miscarried as General Lee was before hand with him and understood the Country best. The Fort lost 10 Men, and had some few Wounded.– Thus you see this great Armament fitted out by Lord Germain to subdue the Rebels in So: Carolina after being off the Town 3 Weeks was obliged to steer for Virginia in a most ignominious manner being intirely conquer[e]d by few men & a Palmetto Cabbage Stalk and land Battery—Had they gained this Battery, they had another larger & Stronger to take before they could come near the Town which is well fortified as I told you in my last – So may the Enemies of America perish—Suppose you had heard this before, but I believe in a different Manner, but I have Related the Truth and had it from people who were on Government side and present at the Action – I doubt not but it makes now much Noise with you & that some will say that the Carolinians can fight & manage a Cannon as well as Lord Cornwallis or Germain—however they may pay for it in the End. . . .

COUNT D'ARGOUT TO VICE ADMIRAL JAMES YOUNG [1]

Sir, At Fort-Royal the 7 August 1776

According to the dispatch which your Excellency has just forwarded to me, the 4th of this month, I see that the account given you by Captain Chapman is not accurate.

The 27th of July last the Captain, being on land, noticed two leagues to the Windward, west of the Point, a ship which maneuvered, to come to anchor in the Roadstead of St. Pierre. He embarked forthwith, cut his cables, weighed anchor and overtook the ship toward 9 P.M. near Pointe du Prêcheur. The frigate, the Shark, fired first and after a Combat of almost 3 quarters of an hour she desisted from fighting and made for Pointe du Prêcheur, giving chase to a schooner up to the very ports of our cannon. Since it was not known that the vessel she was chasing was her dispatch boat, one of our batteries fired two rounds from the cannon, which forced her to stand out to sea again, Meanwhile the American sloop of war peaceably anchored in the roadstead at two o'clock in the morning.

These are the facts according to which you should judge if the details which were transmitted to you are indeed incomplete.

If your Excellency has made all efforts to maintain the amity and good faith which must prevail between us, I surely have not neglected my efforts to contribute to it. In this regard, I believe still that it was due to a misunderstanding that one of your frigates on the 3rd of this month fired two cannon shots into one of our Merchant ships flying its flag.

As for turning over to you the Bostonians frigate which has taken refuge under the flag of the King my Master, I would consider myself unworthy of His confidence if I acquiesced to such a request. Surely if your Excellency knew me better you would not have asked it. I will content myself with noting my surprise to you, age having taught me to speak calmly of things which I feel with passion.

Such is my resolution, which you have no doubt already anticipated. Moreover, I am going to send an account to my Master the King, sending him your request, his orders on the subject, in such case, form the basis for my conduct. I have the honor to be [&c.]

May it please your Honors –

The Committee of Correspondence, Inspection & Safety for the Town of Boston beg Leave to represent to your honourable Board that a Complaint has been made to them "that a certain Briggantine lately a Prize taken by some of the Continental Cruisers whereof one Pine [2] a Person inimical to these States is now Master, is in a very secret Manner getting ready for the Sea at an obscure Part of the Harbour of Lynn called the Pines"—a Situation peculiarly adapted for such a clandestine Purpose as carrying off Prisoners of War & other disaffected Persons & very contiguous to the Residence of the most capital [Tory] now among us—It is unnecessary for this Committee to suggest to your Honors the Danger to which the Departure of this Vessell might subject us – it is too striking to need any Representations—We therefore pray your Honors to give such Directions to the Committee of Lynn, in whose Name

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN OFF FORT WASHINGTON, TO HIS FRIEND IN THIS CITY [NEW YORK], DATED AUGUST 8, 1776." [1]

On the Morning of the 4th Instant, I gave you a short Account of our Brush with the Phoenix and Rose Men of War, off Tarry-town, on Saturday last. Give me now leave to add thereto the following remarks:

The Force with which we were to attack these Ships being entirely inferior to theirs, our Dependence, under Providence, was to find them, or force them, into such a Situation as they could not bring their Broadsides to bear upon our Gallies; and indeed in this Situation the Phoenix was, about twelve Hours before we got up to her, being at that Time fast aground; but before we could reach them, both Ships were entirely clear, with Springs out upon their Cables, and their Broadsides ready to engage us. Let me observe here that this was not at any Time the Case with the Frigates that were attacked by our Gondolas at Philadelphia; which makes all odds: For had the Tide or the Channel prevented the Phoenix and the Rose bringing Springs upon their Cables and their Broadsides to bear, our Gallies would, no doubt, have managed them in our River without much Difficulty. But our gallant Commander was determined to exchange a few Shots with them at all events. The Enterprize was worthy a People contending for their dearest Rights: For it is a Fact that the Ground-tier of even one Side of the Phoenix, was equal to all the Force of our Gallies put together. Judge then – let the World – let our Enemies judge, if the Sons of Connecticut and Rhode-Island, from which States our Gallies were almost wholly officered and manned, did not behave with a Spirit and Intrepidity becoming the Descendants of such noble Ancestors, in fighting, for two Hours, an Enemy of at least four Times their Force. – O! ye despicable ministerial Bawlers! – it could only have entered into such servilly dastard Souls as your own, to believe that the brave Americans were Cowards.

We expect e'er many days to have another strike at them upon a more advantageous Footing; when I hope to give you a more pleasing Relation. To [ha]ve six Galleys within the Distance of Grape Shot from the Broadsides of a British Frigate and a Ship of the Line, for the Space of two Hours, and to loose but two Men, is highly deserving our Admiration and Gratitude. All our wounded Men, except one, are likely to do well. I have been to see them and find that they are taken the greatest Care of. The Commanders of the galleys are anxious to finish this Business, so as to join you at New-York before any Attack may be made there.

Tuesday last arrived Capt. M'Kay from St. Eustatia, with a cargo of rum, sugar, fruit, &c. having met with none of his Majesty's cruisers in the voyage, till he made Block Island, on his homeward bound passage, when he was chased by two frigates, but being near the shore, soon got out of their reach –

VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE TO PHILIP STEPHENS [1]

Sir, August the 8th 1776.

By the Detention of the Sandwich Packet I am enabled to inform You of the Arrival of a great part of the dispersed Transports from the Clyde. Some of them had been separated early from the Flora in bad Weather by the Misconduct of the Masters, as Captain [John] Brisbane represents; And others, subsequent to his Arrival with them off of Boston, in the very foggy Weather he met with on his passage from thence.

The Brune separated from Commodore Hotham, and the Niger with the Light Horse from Halifax, are also arrived here.

On the 2d of this Month the Solebay, Thunder Bomb and Saint Laurence Schooner, with the Transports carrying the 15th, 28th, 33d, 37th, 46th, 54th, and part of the 4th and 44th Regiments; The Ordnance and Victualling Transports from South Carolina; And the Boreas with the 50th Regiment in three Transports from Jamaica; joined the Fleet.

The Renown with the Transports part of the Flora's Convoy which had put into Halifax; the Malaga mentioned in my first Letter, and another of the Transports belonging to the Hessian Embarkation, which had also proceeded for that Rendezvous after their Separation from Commodore Hotham, arrived here the fifth Instant. The Dispatch Schooner, which came from Halifax with this Convoy and separated from it the 13th past, is still missing.[2] They sailed from Halifax the 3d of last Month.

Commissioner Arbuthnot acquaints me by that Opportunity, that the Jersey Hospital Ship put into Halifax the 8th past: The Commander having been obliged by the Weakness of the Ship, to order her Anchors to be cut from her Bows in the bad Weather he met with on his passage out, and to throw over board the Flat Boat he was charged with.

The enclosed Copy of Commodore Hotham's Letter to Vice Admiral Shuldham of the 24th of June will inform their Lordships of the Commodore's proceedings and Intentions at that Period. The Brune sent with his Letters to Halifax, joined him again a few Days after, and proceeded with him on his Way to this Port, until the 19th of last Month: But then separated from him in Chase. Since that time, when he was supposed to be about eighty Leagues to the Eastward, I have not had the Satisfaction to receive any further Intelligence from him.

Captain [Charles] Thompson [3] sailed three Days since for Jamaica, with no other Restraint upon his immediate Return to that Island, except the Charge of two Transports, which he was to see one hundred and fifty Leagues to the Eastward of this port on their Voyage to Cork to bring Provisions for the Army.

Their Lordships will see in the Dispatches from Sir Peter Parker, (of which I have added a Copy from that sent for my Information by the Solebay) the State of the Ships that have been employed on the Expedition under his Command: and also the Disposition he has made of the Ships left to the Southward.

I shall wait 'till I have seen the Commodore, before I trouble their Lordships with any Propositions respecting the purpose for which those Ships have been so appointed: The Condition of the Sloops particularly, seeming such as will disqualify them for any essential Service.

The Army continuing in the same Situation as mentioned in my last, leaves me no Room to make any Addition to this Letter concerning the particular Services that may be required of the Naval Force assembled at this Port. I am Sir [&c.]

Journal of Captain Henry Duncan, R.N.[1]

[On board H.M.S. Eagle off Staten Island]

8th [August].— Saw a canoe coming from the shore. Sent and brought her on board with four riflemen that had left the rebels. During the time we have been here, we have observed the rebels very busy in erecting batteries, fitting out row galleys, and making large and high building of wood to sink in the river to destroy the navigation above the town: the row galley and floating batteries have been sent several times against the Phoenix and Rose, but we hear they have always been beat off with loss.

Major Francis Hutcheson to Major General Frederick Haldimand[1]

Dear Sir Statten Island August 8th 1776

I wrote to you the 28th of last Month by a Ship to Ireland and now take the oppertunity of the Packet to acquaint you of the arrival of General Clinton from South Carrolina with Seven Regiments Vizt 15th, 28th, 33d, 37th, 46th, 54th, 57th the[y] got into sandy Hook the first Instt with two Ships of the Guards, and three of the Hessians that parted Company from Commodore Hothams fleet, some time ago, and put into Halifax; a Colonel Bluck Commands the Hessians, he speaks some English, & seems to wish to speak it better, one of the Ships that has their Rifle Men on board, fell in with & took a large Sloop bound from Philadelphia to France, loaded with Flour, they brought her to Halifax, where she is Condemned, and will be sold for their Account; the Rebells have several privateers at Sea, that have taken some West India Men homeward bound that are great prizes for them . . .

Our Army are in great Health & Spirits, and I beleive we wait only being Joined by the Hessians, to do something of Consiquence, as soon as they arrive & are Brigaded, I will send you the line of Battle – The Phenix & Rose men of War are still about 40 Mile up the North River, but We have no Cummunication with them as yet, & have no doubt but Numbers of the Country People have got on board of them for Refuge who are friends to Government. We have Just now heard, that they Attacked the Ships last Saterday, with five floating Batterys, which were drove back with great loss. . . . [Charles] Lee is on his March back from South Carrolina and will incurrage them in every Villany when he arrives – Sir Peter Parker is not as yet got in his Ship the Bristol is under Jury Masts – General Clinton with the transports parted from him, soon after the[y] Sailed from Charlestown – We in the Qr Master General Department are hard at Work. We have built ten large Battoes that will carry each (with Ease) 100 Men Armed & Accoutered, and are still going on; as they are flat bottomed, like those we had on the Lakes last War, I think they will answer better than those sent from England. We have already Coa[torn] sufficient to make a first landing of Six thousand Men, with fifty ps of Ordnance ready Mounted, which will go on shore on platforms laid on three Cannoes,– Each with a frunt to let down like the Scows, on which the Guns will be run off on the shore – It is most amazing what can keep Commodore Hothams fleet, we have had these ten days past the finest Winds that can blow for them. The Packet is in orders to sail tomorrow Morning, but I beleive she will be kept ready to push off the Moment that fleet appears. I will keep this Letter open to the last Moment in hopes to acquaint you of it Governor Tryon is very well he is on board his Ship Dutches of Gordon, he desired me to present his Compliments to you when I wrote, he seems very grave and I fear is not well pleased, his Consiquence is rather Eclipsed by the Number of great folks we have now among us . . .

Lord [Charles] Cornwallis, General [John] Vaughan and Governor Martin came with the fleet from the Southward. We have too many great Men togather, to agree well long. there must be seperate Commands made for them, none think themselves unequal to the task. by the orders of Yesterday Genl Clinton is to Command the first line & Lord [Hugh] Percy the Second line of the Army, but the Barron De He[i]ster when he comes, will be Second in Command to General Howe. . . .[2]

2. Ibid., Hutcheson wrote another letter to Haldimand on August 12: "I have now the pleasure to acquaint you of the long wished for arrival of Commodore Hotham with the fleet from England . . . Before the arrival of the foraign troops or the Guards, We had 12361 Rank & file fit for Duty."

Essex Journal and New Hampshire Packet, Friday, August 9, 1776

Newbury Port, August 9.

On Wednesday last was carried into Portsmouth, by the Hancock Privateer, who sailed from Philadelphia, a large three deck'd ship named the Reward, of between 5 and 600 tons burthen, she was a 20 gun ship last war, in the service of the British King, she was from Tortola, bound to London, and had on board between 10 and 11 hundred hogsheads of Sugar, 86 hogsheads of Rum, 12 Bales of Cotton, 9 Cannon, and some Brass ditto – There were on board said ship, a number of Turtle directed to Lord North, with his name cut in the shell, the best of which, Capt. Wingate Newman, Master of the Privateer, is determined to send to the Hon. John Hancock.

The Public having been only transiently informed of the capture of the Privateer Brig Yankee-Hero, of this Port, of which James Tracy was late commander; as her engagement with the Milford Frigate was a bold action and well conducted, considering her unavoidable situation, you may if you please Mr. Printer give the following narrative of it, chiefly collected from those who were in the engagement.

Captain James Tracy sailed from Newbury Port the 7th of June in the Yankee-Hero for Boston, with 26 men only, including officers; this number was not a quarter of his complement; he was provisioned for a six months cruize, and was to take in the remainder of his men at Boston; the afternoon he went out, going round Cape Ann he observed a sail in the Offing, but in his situation did not think of looking after her: Two boats full manned with their musquets, who had put out after the sail came on board, and informed him a number of transports had been close in with the Cape that day – 14 men from the two boats joined him, and sent their boats on shore; he had now 40 hands in the whole (only a third his complement) with these he put away for the sail which bore E.S.E. about 5 leagues distance, the wind being then Westerly; at 6 miles distance they perceived her to be a ship, and soon from her management to be a ship of war. As a contest with her must have been very unequal, Capt. Tracy who intended to make a harbor that night, ordered the brig to be put about for the shore not then suspecting the ship could come up with him; but he had not tacked 10 minutes before the Westerly wind died away, and the ship taking a fresh southerly breeze came fast in, endeavouring to cut the brig off from the shore: After some time the ship thus getting in the wake of the brig, the wind again came fresh to the westward upon which the brig hawled to the wind in the best angle for the shore; the ship gave chase, and in an hour came up within half a mile and began to fire her bow chasers which the brig only answered with a swivel, Capt. Tracy reserving his whole fire, until the ship, keeping a constant fire, came up within pistol shot upon his lee quarter, when the brig gave her the best return they could make from their main and quarter deck guns, swivels, and small arms, and after then, kept up a constant fire: The ship was soon up along side, and with 12 nine pounders of a side, upon one deck, besides forecastle and quarter deck guns, and with her marines, overlooking the brig as high as her leading blocks, kept a continual fire, after some time the ship hawled her wind so close, (which obliged the brig to do the same) that Capt Tracy was unable to fight his lee guns, upon this he backed under her stern, but the ship which sailed much faster, and worked as quick, had the advantage and brought her broadside again upon him, which he could not evade; and in this manner they lay not a hundred feet from each other, yawing to and fro, for an hour and twenty minutes, the privateers men valiantly maintaining their quarters against such a superior force. About this time the ships foremost guns beginning to slack fire; Capt. Tracy tacked under her stern, and when clear of the smoak and fire, perceived his rigging to be most shockingly cut, yards flying about without braces, some of his principal sails shot to rags and half his men to appearance dying, and wounded –

Mr. Main, his first lieut. was among the first wounded, and Mr. Davis one of the Prize Masters, fell in the last attack. In this situation they went to work to refit the rigging and to carry the wounded below, the ship having then taken a broad sheer some way off, and none of her guns bearing; but before they could get their yards to rights, which they zealously tried for in hopes still to get clear of the ship, as they were now nearer in shore, or to part from her under the night she again came up and renewed the attack, which obliged Capt. Tracy to have recourse to his guns again, though he still kept some hands aloft to his rigging, but before the brig had again fired two broadsides, Capt. Tracy received a wound in his right thigh and in a few minutes he could not stand; he laid himself over the arm chest and barricadoe, determined to keep up the fire, but in a short time from pain and loss of blood, he was unable to command, growing faint, and they helped him below; as soon as he came too, he found his firing had ceased, and his people round him wounded, and having not a Surgeon with them, in a most distressed situation, most of them groaning, some expiring – Struck severely with such a spectacle, Capt. Tracy ordered his people to take him up in a chair upon the quarter deck, and resolved again to attack the ship, which was all this time keeping up her fire; but after getting into the air, he was again so faint, that he was for some time unable to speak, and finding no alternative, but they must be taken or sunk, for the sake of the brave men that remained, he ordered them to strike to the ship. Thus was this action maintained upwards of two hours in a low single deck'd vessel, with not half the metal the ship had, against an English Frigate, whose navy had been the dread of nations, and by a quarter the number of people in the one as the other, yet the victors exulted as though they had overcome a force as much superior as this was inferior to them. The brig had four men killed and thirteen wounded including officers, the number in the Milford wounded, is not known, though there were some. The deprivation of these brave officers and men is to be regretted by all friends to this country – With justice to Capt. [John] Bur[r] of the Milford, it must be acknowledged, he treated them with humanity and politeness the officers and men that were wounded; but to the eternal disgrace of Britain, and the present king and parliament, let it be recorded, that in this very action above related, upwards of thirty Americans (prisoners in Milford) were forced at the forfeit of their lives to fight against their countrymen, and the officers and men of the Yankee Hero, that were not wounded, are now detained in several of their ships, and may meet with the same cruel fate – an exaction, that even Savages have not been known to require. It is to the credit of the Hero's men, that not one would enter upon the ship's books, though not only urged by every persuasion, but by threats.

Capt. James Tracy, and Mr. Main his first lieutenant, we hear, are likely to do well of their wounds, though they mend but slowly; they and the other wounded men are at Halifax; twelve of the Hero's men were kept on board the Milford – Mr. Robert Tracy his second lieutenant, and the rest of the brig's company, are on board the Renown Commodore [Francis] Banks.

Gentn We have the pleasure to inform you that the enemy's fleet left Potowmack River on Friday last, and is gone off down the Bay; they had collected a number of small vessels, which they had dismasted, and left on the point of St George's Island, with intention to set fire to them, but a high Tide floated them off, and they were driven on Shore near our Guard, who have taken possession of them, and have found sundry goods and other effects on board to the value of three or four hundred Pounds currency; some of the Hulks may be repaired, and made fit for service. – they burnt some other small vessels, and from appearance expect they are gone down to the Cape – our Pilot Boat is just returned yesterday evening and says he heard at Pyanketank, that the men of war had Stopt in Hampton Road, and were making demands of fresh provisions and water, and promised, on being supplied, to leave the Bay – The Deserters, of whom many have come over to us, inform that the Tory families are going, some to the West Indies – others to Halifax, and the Roebuck to New-York.

PURDIE'S Virginia Gazette, FRIDAY, AUGUST 9, 1776

Williamsburg, August 9.

By advices from Hampton, we learn that last Wednesday morning the Right Hon. the Earl of Dunmore, Viscount Fincastle, and Baron Murray of Blair, Mouilli, and Tillimet, after dividing his fleet, and burning ten or a dozen vessels, took leave of the capes of Virginia, where he has, for more than a twelvemonth past, perpetrated crimes that would even have disgraced the noted pirate BLACK BEARD. One part of the fleet was seen to stand to the southward, it is imagined for South Carolina, the other to the northward, supposed for New York. Their strength, from the information of two negro deserters, who came up to Hampton in the evening, amounts to near 400, regulars, negroes, and Tories; that they were now tolerably healthy, and had lately got a supply of provisions, which they took from a Rhode Island vessel. – So respectable a band will, no doubt, be a most valuable acquisition to the generals Howe and Clinton!

We have just got a supply of 290 half barrels of gunpowder, and 90 stand of arms; and 436 barrels, with 18 chests of arms, arrived safe some little time ago.

JOURNAL OF THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL OF SAFETY [1]

[Williamsburg] Friday. August 9th 1776.

The Board having received information of the arrival of Captain [John] Pasture, at Hampton, with 7500 lbs of Gun powder, consigned to this board by Messrs Vanbiber and Harrison of Saint Eustatia, Resolved that Captain Pasture be instructed to leave one thousand weight of the said Powder at Hampton, for the use of the Troops on that Station, And that Captain James Barron carry one thousand weight to Portsmouth of such as he may judge proper for Cannon for the use of the Garrison there, Also that the residue of the said Powder be brought to Jamestown by Capt Pasture.

Information was made to the Board by Captain Barron that the Commissioners of the Navy having appointed a person to victual the Fleet the Commissary of Provisions had refused to supply them any longer and that the Agent Victualler is not yet ready to enter upon the duties of his Office, Ordered therefore that the said Commissary continue to supply the Fleet as usual, till that can be done by the Officer appointed by the Navy Board.

A Letter, was written to Brigadier General [Andrew] Lewis, desiring him to send orders by Express to disband the Minute Men and Militia, lately drawn into Service in the Northern parts of this Country, as the Departure of the British Fleet renders it unnecessary to keep them longer in Service.

Capt. [Daniel] Roberts, Messrs. That the public should guarantee the vessel against the weather, in proportion to what they ventured in her, and as Mr. Moore's vessel runs no risque, the Committee recommended that two thousand pounds be ventured in her, which was agreed to. They also report that Mr. Ratoone offers his vessel to the public; that she is upwards of seventy ton burden, well built, rigged and fit for sea, and that he asks for her no more than two hundred and sixty five pounds.

They also recommended that this vessel be purchased and that Commissioners be appointed to procure a load of rice for her, and send her off – and that Messrs. Thomas Maxwell, Senr., John Winn, Senr., and John Kell be Commissioners for that purpose – which being considered, it met with the approbation of the Board.

Orders were issued that Mr. Edward Telfair have permission and authority to take any quantity of pitch pine plank, that may be upon Mr.

(Sir) I have the honour to inform your Excellency that on Thursday the first day of August last an Armament by Land & Sea being fitted out from the Town of Sunbury in the Province of Georgia. Consisting of a large flat on which was Mounted One Twelve pounder & Six Swivels with two Small Schooners Attendants and about One hundred and Eighty Men, destined for the River St Marys, with Hostile intentions against His Majestys Armed Schooner St John, to lay waste Mr Wrights Fort, and to plunder the Island of Amelia with other plantations adjacent thereunto. I thought it a duty incumbent on me as an Officer of the Crown to give the earliest intelligence thereof to the Commanding Officer of His Majestys Ships then lying at Cockspur, where I repair'd the day following hopeing from thence some relief might be given by Capt [John] Stanhope,[2] to whom I related the whole of this enterprize, with advice how to conduct matters, to frustrate their designs – Capt Stanhope inform'd me he was not in a Capacity to render the least Assistance, being then very Short of Provisions and that if the Sphynx Frigate did not arrive within a few days with some expected Supplys he would be under the necessity of putting to Sea in Order to make the best of his way to the Fleet, for these above recited reasons, and not haveing Orders to Act in a matter of the kind, Capt Stanhope declin'd sending (any) the least Succour or intelligence. On Sunday Morning following a Schooner Arriveing at Cockspur bound for St Augustine I took a passage in her in hopes to have been here in time to have given your Excellency intimation thereof that some force might have been sent form hence to their Assistance but am Sorry to find the length of the passage prevented anything of the kind being done. However I am still of Opinion, that If your Excellency would order an Armed Vessel to run into Sapello or Saint Catharine's their retreat might be cut off and a number of them taken prisoners. I have the Honor to be Your Excellency's [&c.]

Copy Isis, Quebec, August 10th 1776

My Lord, The Prisoners lately taken at Lake Champlain, the Pearl waited for, being just come down; She sails tomorrow – By Accounts received from Chambly they go on as briskly as can be expected at St Johns, in putting up the several Frames of Gun-boats, and the two Schooners Maria & Carleton; the latter will be first ready, but I find not so soon as I had reason to believe, by eight or ten days, some of the Artificers being ill of Fluxes – another armed Brig sent out to General Carleton, by the Treasury Department, is just arrived, her ten six pounders and twenty five Men, will be of Use on the Lake – Westerly Winds & Calms much prevailing, the long-boats of most of the Transports, have for some days, been employed in staging up Provisions, from one Ship to another, relays of which are placed for that Purpose, all the Way from this to the Mouth of the Sorel: when this Business is compleated, they are to depart for England, some very few excepted – those below the Rapids of Richlieu first, & that very shortly.

The Apparatus for Lake Champlain, being of very considerable Magnitude, & the Service of very great Importance, General Carleton as I am, is very sollicitous to have the Armament particularly well Officer'd – I have therefore added Mr Willm Burchell Master's Mate of the Blonde, who is very deserving, & above eleven Years since passed his Examination, to the Number of Officers appointed to serve as Lieutenants, on the approaching Expedition – I beg Leave most humbly & earnestly to recommend him to your Lordship, for establishing Rank accordingly: at present he acts as Lieutenant of the Blonde, in the room of Mr James Dacres who has assisted the Quarter Master General ever since the Army entered St. Peter's Lake, in which Situation a Sea Officer has been absolutely necessary in this terraqueous Expedition; Mr Dacres is to have a Command of Consequence on Lake Champlain, upon which he will be second Sea Officer in point of Seniority, with the Pay of a Master & Commander annexed by the General My Lord, I have the Honor most respectfully to remain [&c.]

Ch[s] Douglas

P.S. The Ship taken down here, And to be re-constructed at St: Johns, is to be called the Inflexible – The Wind is now Easterly, & We look with Impatience for the expected Victuallers from Ireland; To guard against a Change, or Calms, The Boats are kept in readiness, as alluded to in the foregoing, to convey their Contents upwards, but as yet We have heard nothing of any such Victuallers, being entered the River.

As it is more than probable, that Lieut [John] Schank, with the Ship's Company of the Canceaux, will because of the Lake Service, be detained here very late; I presume your Lordship, will have no Objection to her wintering here, if it should be found necessary, more especially as Mr Schank's Service, may also be very useful next Year upon the said Lake.

Thursday last arrived here a French Sloop from the West-Indies, laden with Molasses, &c. The Captain informs, that a Fleet of 20 Spanish Men of War, were lately seen steering for the Havannah.

Some American Vessels, it is said, have been lately seized by the Portuguese, whose Dependence on the British Crown for Protection and Aid against their Spanish Neighbours, obliges them to comply with every thing required of them.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Board, that the present dissatisfaction which prevails in the Naval Department of this State, arising from a disputed Command, will greatly weaken the defence provided for the River Delaware, and that a hearing of the Officers before Convention, and a speedy determination of that matter, would be Conducive to the security of this State.

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 10." [1]

We have this day an account of a Jamaica Guinea ship, with 7 hogsheads of sugar, 8 or 9 of rum, and 7,000 dollars, being taken by a privateer from Maryland, and is safe arrived in port, also a New England brig from Martinico. The Antigua brig I mentioned in my last, fell in with the Boreas man of war, when the prize master passed for the real Captain, went on board, and shewed his papers, and was politely treated; (the Boreas was from the West-Indies and Carolina:) The Captain desired him to keep well to the eastward, but the prize master said he was not afraid of the Americans, as they were a pack of cowards; to which the Captain replied, he was mistaken, for at Carolina they fought more like devils than men, much more than cowards.

JOURNAL OF THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL OF SAFETY [1]

[Williamsburg] Saturday. August 10th 1776.

It being represented to this Board, that the publick landing at Quarles's Warehouse is a proper place for building Vessells for the public service, and that the Warehouses there (at present useless) are very proper for reception of the Workmen as well as the materials for carrying on the Work, and necessaries for subsisting the men, This Board think proper to recommend to the Court of the said County of King William to permit Mr Caleb Herbert and his Workmen to occupy so many of the said Houses as he shall find necessary as long as he shall be engaged in building for the Country, and to allow him at the expense of the public, to make such necessary additions to the said houses as he may be directed to do by the Commissions of the Navy.

Ordered, that Colonel George Weedon of the 3d Battalion be permitted to apply to the Commissioners of the Gun manufactury at Fredericksburg or to Mr James Hunter for such Arms as they may have already finished for the publick, upon his delivering as many other Guns which are now in the possession of his Battalion in their room, which Guns are desired to be forwarded to this place without delay for the use of the marine Companies in York and James river

A Captain of a vessel, who is just arrived with powder and arms, informs, that he met with Lord Dunmore's fleet off the Capes, standing out to sea, in two divisions, one to the southward, and the other to the northward. They have been several days lying in Lynhaven Bay, and have burnt some small vessels which probably they had not men to manage, or were unfit for a voyage. – May they never return.

VICE ADMIRAL JAMES YOUNG TO PHILIP STEPHENS [1]

Sir, English Harbour Antigua 10th August 1776

By the Argo I acquainted their Lordships that the Shark Sloop had Engaged an American Privateer off St Pierres Bay, Martinico; and transmitted for their further information Copys of Captain [John] Chapman's Letter to the Governor of Martinico, and his Answer thereto, likewise Captain Chapman's Letter to me on the occasion. Since then, I sent Captain [Thomas] Eastwood in the Pomona Sloop, with a Letter to the Compte D'argout (Governor of Martinico,) Copy of which Letter, and of Captain Eastwood's Orders, and Instructions thereon are inclosed, and Marked No 1, & 2; and the Paper marked No 3 is the Compte D'argout's answer to my Letter; by which their Lordships will perceive that all kind of Protection, and Countenance, is given to the American Rebels, at the French Islands, and I can likewise assure them of the same being done at the Dutch and Danish Islands: So that I apprehend We shall now be very much pestered with these kind of Armed Vessels, and that they will make no manner of Scruple to Arm and fit them, for Sea, at all the Islands in these Seas, not belonging to Great Britain; as they certainly can more readily procure Ammunition and Naval Stores for them at said Islands, then in America. – The Vessel I wrote about is now heaving down and Refiting at Port Royal, Martinico; it is said She sails very well, and had taken before her arrival there Three Prizes, Vizt a Ship from Grenada, a Brig from this Island (bound to Ireland, with Rum) and another to Glasgow, all which She sent to America.

Their Lordships I presume will perceive by the Governor of Martinique's Answer to my Letter that any further Correspondence with him (or indeed with any of the Governors at the other Islands) will be useless. I therefore hope they will be pleased to give me such farther Instructions as may be thought proper, and necessary on the present occasion, as by the Kings late Instructions We are so very strictly enjoyned to Observe the exactest Neutrality towards the Foreign Ports. – I likewise wish to receive their Lordships farther directions about that part of the Kings Instructions relating to the keeping the American Prisoners, as they will soon increase here to a considerable Number; and there is no place of Security provided to keep them on shore, neither can it be proper in this Climate to Croud the Ships with them, as that would undoubtedly cause great Sickness to happen onboard, and thereby very much distress the Service. – I have just now received a Letter from Governor [Valentine] Morris of St Vincent, Copy of which, marked No 4 is inclosed; by it their Lordships may perceive I have not been mistaken in the Surmise I mentioned in the beginning of this Letter. I shall send the Pomona to Sea to morrow, with directions to Cruize between Port Royal Harbour and the Island of St. Lucia, to endeavour to intercept said Vessels, and will write at the same time to Captain Chapman (who was directed by my Orders of the 16th July last to Cruize about those Islands) to assist in the like Service, and I flatter myself they may by keeping a good look out, be enabled to intercept and take the aforesaid Armed Vessels. I am Sir [&c.]

JAMES WARREN TO JOHN ADAMS [1]

[Extract] Boston, August 11, 1776

. . . I wish I could entertain you with any important intelligence. We have nothing going forward here but fixing out privateers, and condemnation and sale of prizes sent in by them, so many that I am quite lost in my estimate of them, and West India Goods are falling at a great rate. Yesterday arrived a prize taken by a [New] York Privateer with several hundred bags of cotton (a capital article), etc., etc.[2] While all this is going forward, and whole fleets have been here, and might have been taken by your ships if at sea, I can't sufficiently lament the languor, and seeming inattention to so important a matter. A very fine ship lies at Portsmouth waiting only for guns,[3] and I am told there are not yet orders issued for manning those at Newbury Port.[4] This delay disgusts the officers, and occasions them to repent entering the service. . . .

VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE TO LORD GEORGE GERMAIN[1]

Eagle, off Staten Island.
11th August 1776

My Lord,

Conceiving it of the utmost Importance, in pursuit of the Objects of the special Commission with which I had the honor to be charged by His Majesty, that the Colonies in Rebellion should have the earliest Information of His Majesty's most gracious Intentions, with respect to the Restoration of Peace, and the granting of Pardons to such of His Majesty's Subjects as, by a speedy Return to their Allegiance, might deserve the Royal Mercy; I thought proper, in the course of my Voyage, to prepare a Declaration to that Effect, together with a circular Letter address'd to the Governors, or, in their Absence, the Lieutenant Governors or chief Magistrates, of the respective Colonies; Copies of which I have the honor to inclose to your Lordship, Ns 1 & 2. –

I had little expectation that these Letters and Declaration would reach the Hands of His Majesty's Governors. – My Object was, that they should be circulated as much as possible throughout the Provinces; and I hoped to have found an opportunity of landing them soon after the time of their Date, by means of some Vessel I might meet with upon the Coasts; But no opportunity offered 'till I arrived off the Harbor of New York, on the 12th of last Month, when I dispatched the first Lieut of the Eagle, to Amboy, with those intended for the Colonies to the Southward of New York, directing him to deliver them to any Person who might appear in Authority, and to desire they might be forwarded by the Post. –

The inclosed printed Paper No 3, which came accidentally to my Hands, will inform your Lordship of the Resolution of the General Congress, upon their Receipt of the above mentioned Packets, which it seemed were transmitted by Mr (called General) Mercier [Hugh Mercer], the Commanding Officer at Amboy, to Mr Washington at New York, and by him to the Congress. –

Captain [William C.] Burnaby in the Merlin Sloop was charged with the Packets for the Colonies of Massachusets Bay, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New Hampshire, and directed to land them at Rhode Island – On the 28th of last Month he returned, with a letter to me from Mr [Nicholas] Cooke, acknowledging the receipt of my letter & Declaration, and acquainting me that he had communicated them to "the General Assembly of that State" then sitting at Newport, who would transmit Copies of them to "the most Honorable the General Congress of the united States of America, to whom every application ought to be Addressed, and must be referred." A Copy of Mr Cooke's letter to me is enclosed No 4 –

As the issuing of the above mentioned Letters and Declaration, is the only Measure I judged necessary to take before I could have a Conference with General [William] Howe, I have nothing further to add in this separate Dispatch but my hopes of being informed by your Lordship, that my Conduct is honored with His Majesty's Approbation. – I am &c.

JOSIAH BARTLETT TO JOHN LANGDON [1]

[Extract] [Philadelphia] August 11th 1776

Dear Sir. Yours of the 29th ulto is come to hand and I congratulate you on your late appointment. Col Whipple sets off to morrow morning for Portsmouth and takes with him your commission as Continental Agent and will be able to inform you of every thing relative to it. He will be likely to make a little stop at New York and will go by the way of Providence and if possible procure the guns for your ship &c which stops may prevent his being with you as soon as this may reach you, but will no doubt in a few days after. He takes with him sixty thousand dollars for the account of New Hampshire . . .

You have no doubt heard that Clinton and Cornwallis since their defeat at South Carolina have joined General Howe – Governor Dunmore and his ragamuffins it is said have left Virginia and are supposed to be going to join General Howe. I think we may expect that some important event will soon take place at or near New York – God grant it may be favorable to the United American States

August 13th. Col Whipple left us for New Hampshire yesterday 2 o'Clock. I am [&c.]

ROBERT MORRIS TO SILAS DEANE [1]

[Extract] Philada August 11th, 1776

Dear Sir I have been so exceedingly harrassed with Public business of various kinds that it has not been in my power to be so good a Correspondent to you as I always intended, but as you know my situation you'l make allowances & excuse it. I am much Concerned that we have been so unfortunate in our Remittances to you. One ship whose Cargo Cost £6000 Curry and upwards has been taken sometime since this Cargo was intended for Cadiz to address of Messrs Duff & Welsh with orders to hold the Nt. pceeds at your disposal but as they will never receive it you need not write to them on the Subject,[2] Since that a Brigt Charming Polly (first Capt McFaden [William McFadden]) Capt [Philip] Lacey has been taken on this Coast with a Cargo of near £3000 Curry that was bound for Bourdeaux Consd to Messrs Delap with orders to Account with you for the Ntpceeds [3] besides these Genl Washington has unloaded either two or three Vessells that were loaded on purpose to make Remittances to you and their Voyages by this means are broke up. other Cargoes are & have been necessarily detained by the Men of War on our Coasts and in our Bays &c, hitherto you will think your self unlucky in these untoward Circumstances and you have really been so, but this must not dispirit us for you may depend on it, I will persevere in making you the necessary Remittances with all possible Expedition, and you will in the end be fully Convinced of my attention to you

By this Conveyance I remit sundry bills to Messrs Saml & J. H. Delap Amounting to £2000.0.9 Sterlg with orders to hold the same at your disposal the amount being towards the Indan Contract and you will apply it accordingly, by other Conveyances I shall remit more bills as fast as I can get them – in the mean time I hope you will appear in such a respectable character as to be able to obtain all the Indian Goods on Credit untill the remittances get safely to hand these Goods will be exceedingly wanted and I most sincerely wish you may not have lost one mom[ent] in obtaining & sending them out. . . .

I have in a former letter told you the whole Continent wou'd be in want of Woolen Goods the ensuing Winter and you may depend that sufficient supplys cannot be sent out in time. We have lately got in a most Noble Crop of Flax and every body that understands cleaning & manufacturing of it are employed this will furnish large quantitys of Coarse Linens, but Linens of about 2/ to 3/ Stg p yard, good shirting Linens Table Linen, Ravens or other Duck fit for Tents, Sail Cloth of all sorts, Cambricks, Lawns, Muslin &c will all Continue to be much Wanted, all sorts of Cutlary Ware, Coppers Tin & Lead & every kind of Goods fit for Winter Wear must bring any price I therefore propose that Tom [4] & you shou'd try yours and our Credit jointly and propose to some of the most Wealthy Houses in France to ship out quantitys of suitable Goods to Martinico & Cape Francois to be reshipped from thence hither, I dont care how much Value you send the more the better especially if you can get Insurance made on the Value from the West Indies here against all Risques we will employ good Vessells in transporting them hither and it will very often be in my power to obtain Convoy as our Frigates will frequently be Cruizing in the West Indies. I wou'd propose that you shou'd immediately send off as large a Value as you can in Winter Goods & an assortment every Month afterwards suitable for the Season at which they may be expected to arrive.

These Goods may if you please come out 2/3ds on account of Willing, Morris & Compy and 1/3d on your Acct You must fix with those that Ship them the length of the Credit and the Interest to be paid for their advances as well as their Commission &c. youl observe that British Manufacturers were before the present Contest shipped from England in the greatest abundance for 2½ pCt Comn on 12 Months Credit, after which 5 pCt Interest to Commence if the payments were not then made; I am very sensible we cannot expect that Confidence from French & other Foreign Merchants now, that we formerly enjoyed with the Merchants in England, but I know that all Trading People do & must run Risques & that they are content to do so, when paid an equivalent, now when it is Considered that from our late Non Exportation agreement, and from other interruptions to Commerce, it is not possible we can Remit bills previously or have proper Funds in Europe, it will not be thought strange that we shou'd under such Circumstances seek for Credit, and if our Cause is Crowned with success (which I think must be the case sooner or later) there is little danger in trusting us or indeed none at all, & that on the Contrary if we shou'd be unsuccessfull the Goods may be stopped in the West Indies for you may be sure we will not order them from thence unless we see perfect security in sending. I say when these things are attended to, not half the danger will appear that may at first be imagined, now if the Goods arrive safe we can sell them instantly for ready Money at very high prices and wou'd immediately Invest the Money in the purchase of Tobacco, Indigo, Flour wheat & such other produce as may suit the Fren[ch] Market. If Insurance can be made on these Products against the Risques the Remittances will thereby be Rendered Certain & the payment for the Goods speedy I hope therefore you will exert Yourselves to the utmost to Effect this plan and if any French or Dutch Houses choose to join you in it they may be a third, you a third & we a third or in any other proportion you like better. At Martinico Wm Bingham Esqr & Mr Richd Harrison will Receive & forward the Goods at Cape Francois Mr Stephen Ceron[io] or in his absence Mr Jno Gaignard. . . . You may depend that the pursuit of this plan deserves your utmost exertion & attention so farr as your mind is engaged in the making of Money for there never was so fair an opportunity of making a large Fortune since I have been Conversant in the World And you may assure yourself and all Concerned in this matter that I will manage whatever comes here to the utmost advantage and make the most immediate Returns for the Value, therefore I hope you will execute something Considerable without delay . . . there are many changes in Congress since you left us some for the better & some Worse. Our Frigates are really fine Ships and the Marine Committee have it in charge to Report ways & means for encreasing it and this can be done with great facility & dispatch, so that you may expect these States to become very formidable on the Seas next Summer or Sooner . . .

Sir

I am sorry to acquaint You that several of the Ships under my Convoy are exceedingly refactory and inattentive to the Signals made for His Majesty's Service, which gives me reason to believe that some of those who sail best incline to make the best of their way, which may occasion detriment to the Service: I therefore humbly represent that if your orders will admit of

JOHN LANGDON TO NICHOLAS BROWN, PROVIDENCE [1]

Sir – Portsmouth 12th August 1776

Your favour P Captain Hawkins I've recd am sorry for the Misfortune of the Masts; on receiving your Letter, immediately orderd our Mast makers to examine the Docks for Masts they have got some of them, and are at work, shall soon have them ready. Capt Hawkins is at Newbury will soon be here with his Sloop to take them round, have order'd some to be hawled for Top Masts &c shall take every care to give every dispatch in my power, we shall, Hew them; and also toung'd them, that they may be lighter for transporting on deck – Colo [Joseph] Nightingale has been here, with whom I've discoursed fully relative to the Guns; I've desired him to inform the Committee that I depend on the next Guns to your's and therefore if the Contract is wrote & sent down, I will sign it, and send it back, and in that case my Guns will be done (as I conceive) full time for Your second Ship,[2] therefore I cant conceive the least impropriety of your lending me the Guns for this Ship now, as mine will be done in time for you, as I never meant to interfere with the first Contract for Guns, for I understood when there, that the Committee could not cast any more at so low a price; therefore expect to pay more.

If it suites the Committee, should choose to have 26, 12 pounders, 6 Six pounders – 20 Swivels, but should it not suit, the whole Twenty Six to be Twelve pounders, Eight or ten 18 pounders would do, I mean if the Guns can be lent out of those already cast, which I hope they may, as it will most certainly serve us all to get this Ship out – Should the Committee see fit to spare them, pray send teams off immediately with them to Boston to the Care of Messrs Brusk and Hammott who will send them me by Water pray let me know by return of post if they will spare them, and how soon they will set off, pray send by the first teams, one of each sort. – I am with Respect [&c.]

Sir – Boston 12th Augst 1776

I am honour'd with your Excellencys Signature under the 5th Instant, directing me to take the Necessary Care of all the Warlike Stores, and Necessaries. for an Army, till I may receive Orders from proper Authority. your Excellency may rely on the Strictest punctuallity in Complying with any future Orders I may Receive

I have not Omitted since I have been in this department giving a particular caution to each Commander to prevent any Embezlements, and have furnished them with the resolve of Congress on that head, but it Signifies little, for great Complaints are made, by those who came in the last prize, that they Acted more like pirates than men who were so honorably employ'd. I am taking every measure to Efface that notion of their being privateers, for while they continue in it they will Act like such. Great need there is of a reform in our little Navy which I hope in time may be effected I have the Honour to be with great truth [&c.]

JOURNAL OF AMBROSE SERLE [1]

Monday, 12th. [August]

This Morning, as soon as it was light, we were gladdened with the Sight of the grand Flight [sic fleet] in the offing. The Joy of the Navy & Army was almost like that of a Victory.

The Fleet came up this Evening to the number of 107 Sail. What is very extraordinary, they have lost but 8 men in the whole Passage of 14 Weeks; and just before they came to the mouth of the Harbour they fell in with Capt. Davis [Henry Davies] of the Repulse, who convoyed the Remainder of the Embarkation from Portsmouth, though he sailed some Weeks after the Commodore [Hotham]. So large a Fleet made a fine Appearance upon entering the Harbor, with the Sails crouded, Colors flying, Guns saluting, and the Soldiers both in the Ships and on the Shore continually shouting. The Rebels (as we perceived by the Glasses) flocked out of their lurking Holes to see a Picture, by no means agreeable to them.

Agreeable to the order of the day, Commodore Hopkins attended, and was admitted; when the examination, taken before the Marine Committee,

The Congress then took into consideration the instructions given to Commodore Hopkins, his examination and answers to the Marine Committee, and the report of the Marine Committee thereupon; and, the farther defence by him made, and the testimony of the witnesses; and, after some debate, the farther consideration thereof was postponed. Autobiography of John Adams [1]

[Philadelphia] Monday August 12. 1776.[2]

Commodore Hopkins had his hearing, as in the Journal. On this Occasion I had a very laborious task, against all the Prejudices of the Gentlemen from the southern and middle States, and of many from New England. . . . I thought, however that Hopkins had done great Service and made an important beginning of Naval Operations.

It appeared to me, that the Commodore was pursued and persecuted by that Anti New England Spirit, which haunted Congress in many other of their proceedings, as well as in this Case and that of General Wooster. I saw nothing in the Conduct of Hopkins, which indicated Corruption or Want of Integrity. Experience and Skill might have been deficient, in several Particulars: But where could We find greater Experience or Skill? I knew of none to be found. The other Captains had not so much, and it was afterwards found, they had not more Success.

I therefore entered into a full and candid Investigation of the whole Subject, considered all the Charges and all the Evidence: as well as his Answers and proofs: and exerted all the Talents and Eloquence I had, in justifying him where he was justifiable, and excusing him where he was excusable. When the Tryal was over Mr. [William] Ellery of Newport, came to me and said you have made the old Man your Friend for Life. He will hear of your Defence of him, and he never forgets a Kindness. [3]

2. While Adams dated his comments on the day that Hopkins appeared before Congress, the entry really covers August 12, and August 15, 16, when the debate continued.
3. Adams added in his autobiography:

> More than twenty Years afterwards, the Old Gentleman hobbled on his Crutches to the Inn in Providence, at four score Years of Age, one half of him dead in consequence of a paralytic Stroke, with his Eyes overflowing with tears to express his Gratitude to me. He said He knew not for what End he was continued in Life, unless it were to punish his Friends or to teach his Children and Grand Children to respect me. The President [Jonathan Maxcy] of Rhode Island Colledge [Brown University] who had married his Daughter, and all his Family shewed me the same affectionate Attachment.

JOHN ADAMS TO ABIGAIL ADAMS [1]

[Extract] [Philadelphia] Aug. 12 76

A french Vessell, a pretty large Brigantine, deeply loaden, arrived here yesterday from Martinique. She had 50 Barrells of Limes, which are all sold already, at such Prices, that the Amount of them will be sufficient to load the Brig with Flour. A Trade We see, even now, in the midst of summer is not totally interrupted, by all the Efforts of our Enemies. Prizes are taken in no small Numbers. A Gentleman told me a few days ago that he had summed up the sugar, which has been taken, and it amounted to 3000 Hdds. since which two other ships have been taken and carried into Maryland.

Thousands of schemes for Privateering are afloat in American Imaginations. Some are for taking the Hull ships, with Woolens for Amsterdam and Rotterdam – some are for the Tin ships – some for the Irish Linnen ships – some for outward Bound and others for Inward Bound India Men – some for the Hudsons Bay ships – and many for West India sugar ships. Out of these Speculations many fruitless and some profitable Projects will grow.

We have no News from New York. All is quiet there as yet. Our Expectations are raised – the Eyes of the World are upon Washington and How, and their Armies. The Wishes and Prayers of the virtuous Part of it, I hope, will be answerd. If not, yet Virtues grow out of Affliction.

New-England Chronicle, Thursday, September 5, 1776 [1]

Halifax, August 13.

Saturday night last [August 10] arrived below, and Sunday morning came up to town, his Majesty's frigate Liverpool, from Head-Quarters, and brought in with her a Jamaica ship, and an Antigua brig retaken; also, a Philadelphia sloop bound to some part of New-England.[2] We are informed that General Howe and the Army under his command are encamped on an Island near New-York, called Staten-Island.

We have undoubted authority, that two Thousand Highlanders under the Convoy of three Frigates, and three armed schooners on a new construction for drawing the least quantity of water, have been dispatched by Lord Howe up the Bay of Fundy, to penetrate by that side into the New-Hampshire Government, and that Col. M'Lane with 3000 of the lower country Militia of Canada, with 600 Indians are on their full march to join that Body of Highlanders at the head of the River St. John's, and to cooperate with them.

On the 2d inst. arrived his Majesty's Frigate Milford, Capt. [John] Burr, from a cruize, and bro't in a prize Schooner loaded with Fish and Lumber for the West-India Market. – [3] Also, the Princess Royal, a homeward Jamaica ship, (loaded with Rum, Sugar, and other valuable Articles) which having parted her Convoy, fell in (off the Bermuda Islands) with a Letter of Marque Schooner in the American service of 6 Guns, and some swivels, bound to Santa Cruze who took her and put an officer and 12 men on board. But after they had her in possession 16 days, she fell in with the Milford, in Boston Bay, who retook her, but the Prize Master and his men took to their boat and got on shore before the Milford came up.

1. Reprinted from the Nova Scotia Gazette.
2. The recaptured vessels were the Ship Nevis, from Nevis for London, and the brig Devonshire, from Antigua for Ireland. The prize sloop was the Swan, laden with Indian corn, and taken August 1, 1776.
3. The schooner prize was the Triton, from Kennebec River, taken July 20, 1776.

COMMODORE MARRIOT ARBUTHNOT TO CAPTAIN ANDREW BARKLEY, H. M. S. Scarborough [1]

Sir Halifax 13th August 1776.

Having just now receiv'd information that the Rebels of New England are preparing to Invade this Province, & that for that purpose, they have made a Road from St Johns River enlong the Coast as far as the River Shepody toward the Head of the Bay of Fundy, and that they propose bringing Cannon in Boats along Shore, for the purpose of attacking the Fort at Cumberland.

I therefore think it necessary for His Majestys Service to desire that you do without loss of time, collect all the naval Force you can, & proceed directly to St Johns River, & there receive what Intelligence you can as to any such designs, or defeat any preparation's within your reach that you may find making; that from thence you proceed up to the River Shepody keeping close in Shore, [(] which I am inform'd may be done with safety) in order to take up any of their Vessels which may be employ'd on this Occasion. When you shall have arriv'd at Shepody, you will then do what you shall think necessary for the King's Service, and so proceed to Cumberland, and co-operate with Colonel Gorham, unless in your way you shall have had an oppertunity of defeating any preparations or attemps for an invasion. I am hond with your Excellencie's Favor of 24th June, wch came to Hand at a time that I was Absent on a Journey in the Country, This wth a great uncertainty whether to undertake the Task assigned me therein has been the Reason, that I have not returned an earlier Answer, at length however, upon the Consideration of the Delay a Refusal must Occasion, & that the Excuse I might Alledge in my favor might be pleaded by Others who most probable must have been in the same Situation, vizt an Unacquaintedness with the Value of the Various Articles to be Apprized, has determin'd me to Undertake the Trouble in Conjunction with Mr Willm Davis Mercht of this Town on Behalf of Capt Manly & his Crew, We have spared no Pains to Ascertain the Value of the different Articles; in Order to wch we have Applied to All the Traders & Mechanicks most conversant therein & have from the Information recd from them & Others most capable of giving it, Endeavor'd to make an Estimation as Near to Truth as might be, which however it may deviate I am conscious on my Own part cannot be Attributed to Inattention or Neglect, & hope will be such as to meet the Approbation of your Excellency & the Honbl Congress – [2] I have the Honour to be with greatest Esteem & Respect [&c.]

Captain John Smith to the New York Convention [1]

Gentlemen – Esopus, August 13th, 1776.

When Captain Biddle, of the Congress armed vessel the Andrea Doria, on the 29th May last took the Oxford transport, on board of which was a company of His Britannic Majesty's 42d regiment of foot, Capt. Biddle upon taking the officers out of the Oxford, only allowed them to take their bedding and a few shirts with them, and told them that by orders of the Continental Congress, all that was the private property of the prisoners that were taken would be allowed them, and that he would return the officers their swords upon coming on shore.

My reason for troubling you with this, gentlemen, is, as you mentioned, that when any prisoners had any business of any kind they were to apply to you. Now I and the rest of the officers of my company, who were taken on board the Oxford, will be glad to be informed whether or not we will be allowed our baggage, and what was our private property that was on board when we were taken. All my clothes and other baggage, and about 60 guineas in cash were on board; as likewise Lieut. Franklin, who is prisoner with me here, and Lieut. Morrow and Ensign Campbell, whom Captain Biddle carried to Rhode-Island with him. Captain Biddle gave command of the Oxford to one of his lieutenants, a Mr. [John] McDougal and a Mr. Tribbet [John Trevett]. I should be very much obliged to you, gentlemen, if you will be so kind as let me have an answer to this as soon as it is convenient. I am, with respect, gentlemen [&c.]

I this morning waited on Adl Shuldham, & asked his opinion in regard to the Freight, for the money brought from So Carolina, he desires me to inform you, that as a receipt was given for the money when rec'd on board the Solebay, I stood charged with it, & must have been answerable for any loss, & thinks the offer I have made fore one pr Cent, very reasonable, as it has ever been a custom, for Kings money, as well as Contractors, to pay freight.
As you consented in referring it to Adl Shuldham, I hope, to have no occasion to give you any further trouble about it. I have the Honor to be Sr [&c.]

ROBERT CHRISTIE, JR. TO DANIEL OF ST. THOMAS JENIFER [1]

Dear Sir Baltimore 13th August 1776

I wrote you sometime ago acquainting that I had two Schooners wc were sunk at the entrance of this harbor by order of the Committee, for upwards of three months. An allowance has been made me, to put the Vessells into as good order as when they were taken away, but I am told an application must be made to the Council of Safety for payment of the demurrage. I should be glad to know when it will be proper to apply, & what vouchers the Council will require to ascertain the time the vessells were out of my possession? If necessary I can make it appear, that I have paid considerable sums for freight of other Vessells, during the time my own were sunk – I hope you will excuse my being so troublesome to you; I do not want to come down to Annapolis, untill I am prepared wt the necessary vouchers to compleat the business – You will oblige me very much by giving me an answer at your convenience. I am Dear Sir [&c.]

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ANDREW SNAPE HAMOND [1]

[H.M.S. Roebuck, July 15 to August 13, 1776]

July [15] George's Island is about 2½ miles long, has an excellent Harbour on the East side of it, and a small Haven on the North, sufficiently open at one end for small Vessels to turn in to it, but at the other is not above 100 yards wide nor has above 3 or 4 feet water. Lord Dunmore Landed his Troops upon it the day after our Arrival, and we searched every where for fresh water, but on Account of the dryness of the season, very little prospect appeared of being able to supply the Fleet with a sufficient quantity for their Voyage from thence. I therefore ordered the different Vessels to send their empty Casks onboard 20th two of the Transports carrying the detachment of the 14th Regt & a part of the Queens; and with them, accompanied by Lord Dunmore in his own Ship, we sailed up the Potomack in order to fill the empty Casks with fresh water; and at the same time harass & annoy the Enemy by landing at different places. The Fowey remained with the rest of the Fleet and the Otter was sent to cruize in the Bay.

While the Fleet lay at Gwin's Island the Carpenters had been employed in fitting up one of the Flats, which we found there, to carry a Cannon, and to Row with 14 Oars: I put a Six pounder into it, and kept it constantly employed in the little creeks & Bays about George's Id by being in a great measure covered over, the People were quite sheltered, could go close to the shore with safety, and by that means did great mischief among the Enemy.

On our Expedition up the River we kept the shores on both sides in continual alarms, but we saw no considerable
July 23d body of the Enemys Troops untill we arrived into Fresh water, when a large Number assembled at the House of a Mr Brent on the Virginia side, and seemed to bid us defiance; However we landed about 100 Men at Noon day, under cover of a Tender & the Row Galley, beat the Enemy off (which were double that Number, and very advantageously posted) and set fire to the House and all the buildings: when we returned to our Ships without the loss of a single Man and only one officer & 5 Men wounded

25th The water being filled, and the wind coming favorable we moved the Ships a few leagues down the River, with an intention of landing in the Morning at day break at a Mr Mercer's House on the Virginia shore, which is a guard House for the Rebels, but as it came to blow hard, and the wind down the River we rather chose to pursue our way to the Fleet. After that time the Ships got so often a ground that the People were too much fatigued to attempt any opperation[s] on shore, and we joind the Fleet at St George's Island on the 29th July.

29th July The Defence a Rebel Privatier of 20 Guns belonging to Maryland, hearing of the Fleet's being left at George's Island under the Protection of the Fowey only, came with 2 Tenders up the River to attack them, and a Battery from St Mary's was to be opend as soon as she appeared in Sight. The Roebuck's return frustrated their schemes, and the Rebel Vessels returned to their rendezvous at Baltimore.

In about three days the Fleet had taken onboard their water from the Transports, when after destroying about 20 Sail of Vessels that could not be navigated we got under way, proceeded down the Chesepeak Bay, and arrived at the Capes the 4th Augst

The next day the Otter sailed and convoyed about 50 Sail of Vessels to St Augustine & Bermudas.

6th Augst The Fowey Sailed with about 7 Sail of Vessels bound to England, onboard one of which was Govr Eden, when after seeing them 20 leags from the Coast, she was ordered to return & cruize off the Capes of Virginia.

A violent bilious intermitting fever, together with a most inveterate scurvy had for these two months past raged with g[reat] violence both in the men of war & Transports, and was so mortal that the Roebuck had lost 30 of her best seamen, and had 76 on the Surgeons sick list. The Fowey had 35 Men sick, and Lord Dunmore's Army was reduced to about 150 Rank & File, one third of which was incapable of duty. I therefore thought it necessary to consult with his Lordship on the measure the most proper to pursue in our weak situation, the result of which was that we should make the best of our way to New York for the folowing reasons.

1st The total impracticability of rendering his Majesty any services by remaining, with the very few Men we had left capable of doing duty.

2d The impossibility of landing even to water the ships, (The springs on the Islands being all dried up[)].

3d The necessity of the Admiral & General's being acquainted with our situation as soon as possible, to prevent the disgrace His Majestys Troops might suffer when their extream weakness became known to the Enemy.

5th Augst Accordingly we set sail from the Capes the 5 day Augt with the Dunmore, 5 Sail of Transports, two Vessels laden with Rum sugars & dry goods, and 5 Small Tenders & Pilot boats,

13th and arrived off of Sandy Hook the 13th Augt where we joind Sir Peter Parker from the So ward, and saild up to New York in Compy

In our way we saw several Rebel Privatiers; two of which we chaced, but to prevent losing Company with the Convoy was obligd to leave them.

Thus ended my Command to the Southward.

WILLIAM BULL, JR. TO JOHN PRINGLE, LONDON [1]

[Extract] Chas Town August 13th 1776.

We are making great Preparations here, in Case of a Visit in the Winter. If Howe shou'd be beat at N. York, I suppose he & his Myrmidons will either go to Virginia, or come here. I hope we [are] invincible to any thing that will come agst us –

We have some Thoughts of Sending a Couple of Thousand Men, to ravage E. Florida, & cut off the Communication between Augustine & the Country.

You see how this Province has exerted itself, altho' we have had some inimical Villains amongst us, we have taken such Steps we keep them in Good Order.

Independence is declared throughout the 13 united States of America. I suppose it will not be long before you see the Declaration of the Congress, as there are Vessells fitting out to trade with foreign Nations, and I imagine before now Ambassaders are sent to treat of Foreign alliances – All the Troops both foreign & domestic that Great Britain can send will [not] be able to hurt America. She bids degenerate Britain Defiance.

P.S. When Administration gets an Acct of the Action of Sullivan's Island; they will be devilishly at a Loss, how to dress it up for the Public. The Day after it, the Rainbow Sloop of War was sent to Great Britain with the Accts – [2] Be assured they had near 300 kill'd & wounded in the Action, we took 50 highlanders, & have had abt 50 Deserters, from the Navy & Army, who say that if the Army had been encamp'd on the Main One half at least wou'd have deserted, but it was as difficult for them to make their Escape, as it was for the Seamen. –

The Deserters from the Navy have brought us up several fine Barges – And the whole Fleet & army have been gone ab[ou]t two or three Weeks – With every Lye the Ministry & their Tools can invent upon this Occasion, it must make greatly against them.

We have sent one of our arm'd Vessell's of Eighteen Guns yesterday, to cruise off Augustine, in Hopes of falling in wth two Ships expected from London there, wth Military Stores and dry Goods . . .

Your Memorialists are Also Informed by Capt [Stephen] Cleveland, who goes Master of the Brig. that Mr John Lawless of Salem has proposed to take Passage in his Brig. in his way to England or Ireland – the latter being his Native Country! Now your Memorialists think the Character of both those Gentlemen, (Messrs Dowse & Lawless) too liable to suspicion as Unfriendly to America to be permitted to take Passage in said Brig. if they shou'd be allowed to go in any Other way, in a word your Memorialists fear it may be attended with Mischief if any Other than the Proper Crew of the Brig or passengers of Known good Characters, well Affected to these States, and Furnished with the Necessary Credentials, be Suffered to go in her –

. . . A Committee was chosen to devise during the Recess of the [General] Court, some successful Method of making Cannon, & I hope this Matter will be p[u]t forward to Advantage; I have no Doubt that the Manufacture of Small Arms, will at the first Meeting of the Assembly receive every possible Encouragement; We have happily succeeded in the Manufacture of Salt petre, & we have 3 Powder Mills at Work & a fourth erecting; Salt I have no Doubt will be made as soon as we feel the Necessity of it; hitherto, tho' it has been at an high Price, we have not suffered for the Want of it. I am more ignorant as to the Probability of our getting Sulphur, & Lead; the first I believe we shall be able at some Seasons to import, if the Cruisers of the Enemy are ever so vigilant; they are however both of them Objects that deserve Attention; the mention of the Enemies Cruisers, reminds me of our own; It is an unlucky Circumstance that the continental Frigates are not yet at Sea, had they been many more of the Enemies Vessells, & a Number of their Troops would have fallen into our Hands, I suppose the Delay has been inevitable; it surely is a Matter that will not be neglected; Is it not worthy Consideration whether it will not be adviseable, to order those continental armed Vessells which are ready for Service, in Conjunction with the Vessells of the particular States, & such private armed Vessells as will engage, immediately to Newfoundland; much may be done against the British Fishery, on Shore as well as at Sea, we shall be furnished with a Commodity to exchange for such french Goods as may be bro't us; the West India Islands will be without their Supply of Fish, & the Poole Men, who meant us much Harm, will be rewarded according to their Deeds. . . .

I sailed from Barbadoes the 21st of June. On the 12th of July made a sail astern, she soon came up with us, though we little imagined her to be an American privateer, being then in lat. 32.25. long. 52. At half past eight in the night she fired a gun to leeward – from which we concluded she was an English cruizer – but were too soon convinced to the contrary. When we first made the sloop she appeared large, from the crowd of sail she carried; but on a nearer survey we found her to be very small, painted black, with 10 guns, 50 men, and every necessary for a cruize. She is called the Montgomery, Capt. Buckling [Daniel Bucklin]. They took out all the Eagle's people but myself, the boatswain, and a boy, and convoyed us to this place.

My people are all well; we are supported at present at the expence of the owner of the privateer, and indulged with the liberty of going about where we please, and are in every respect treated with the greatest kindness and civility. We are the seventh West-Indiaman taken by this privateer; numbers of vessels have been taken coming from the West-India Islands.

VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE TO PHILIP STEPHENS [1]

August the 14th 1776.

Sir I have the Satisfaction of being able to inform their Lordships by the Sandwich Packet, that Commodore [William] Hotham, whose distinguished Abilities gave Room for every favorable Expectation, arrived on the 12th with Eighty five Sail of his Convoy; completing with those few before arrived, the whole of the Hessian Embarkation that sailed from England under his Direction. He was joined off of this Port, by Captain [Henry] David (whose Capacity and Diligence have been particularly exemplified on this Occasion) with all the Transports in his Care, that were able to accompany him out of the British Channel. The Reports delivered by those Officers are herewith enclosed.

The Loss of the Hessian Troops by Sickness is most inconsiderable, Not exceeding ten or twelve, as I have yet heard; tho' for the last fourteen Days of their Passage, the Scurvy began to prevail; But amongst the Crews of the Ships of War in a greater Degree.

I am favored with your several Letters of the 27th of April and the 13th and 22d of May, to the Contents of which I shall have due Regard.

I am also to acknowledge the Receipt of an Order from their Lordships of the same Date with the last, respecting the supposed Situation of the Bahama Islands, founded on the Intelligence transmitted by Governor Tonyn, and Lieutenant [William] Grant Commander of the St. John Schooner.

As soon as the Capital Service impending, the permanent Establishment of the Army in this Province, is effected; To which I conceive their Lordships will approve that every Consideration of lesser Moment should give place, And after a Port of Retreat is secured for the Winter-Use of the Fleet; my earliest Attention will be given to provide more amply than my present Means will admit, the other requisite Services comprehended in the Tenor of their Instructions.

Whilst I was preparing to close this Dispatch, the Commodore Sir Peter Parker in the Bristol, with the Experiment and Syren, Sibella Store-Ship and two Transports having each three Companies Part of the 28th and 57th Regiments on board arrived here from South Carolina. And soon after the Roebuck with the Ships lately attending the Earl of Dunmore, and that in which his Lordship was embarked, from Virginia.

The immediate Departure of the Packet not allowing Time to examine so fully into the State of those Ships as to enable me to form a Judgment thereon fit to be reported immediately, Their Lordships I flatter myself, will have the Indulgence to dispense with the Receipt of any more particular Returns than those before prepared of the State and Appointment of the Squadron herewith enclosed, by the present Opportunity [2]

I cannot however inform them too soon of the great Want of Ordnance Stores of all Species, for the Ships of this Squadron: particularly Match, Powder, and Ball of 6, 9, 12, 18 and 24 lb; Both to supply the past, and probable future Expence of those Articles: as I have no Advice of any adequate Provision having been made thereof. I am Sir [&c.]

Journal of Ambrose Serle [1]

[On board H.M.S. Eagle]
Wednesday, the 14th [August].

This morning early, Sir Peter Parker in the Bristol, with the Experiment & Roebuck, and several Transports, appeared in the offing; and a little after Noon came up & saluted the Admiral [Howe]. The Bristol has lost her main & mizen Masts in the affair at Charles Town, and is much shattered about the Stern. We have now a gallant Fleet here, consisting of the following Ships:

	Guns		Guns
Eagle	64	Phoenix	44
Asia	64	Orpheus	32
Chatham	50	Emerald	32
Centurion	50	Niger	32
Renown	50	Repulse	32
Preston	50	Brune	32
Bristol	50	Solebay	28
Experiment	50	Rose	28
Roebuck	44	Greyhound	28
Rainbow	44	Syren	28.

Besides Sloops, Bombs, Fireships, armed Vessels, &c. The whole Fleet consists of about 350 Sail. Such a Fleet was never seen together in America before; wch is allowed on all Hands.

We had a great formal Dinner on board this Day. Our Company consisted of Genl. [Leopold von] Heister, two other Hessian Generals, with their respective Suites, Lord [Hugh] Percy, Genl. [William] Howe, Ld. [Charles] Cornwallis, Genl. [James] Grant, Admiral [Molyneux] Shuldham, Sir Wm Erskine, Col. Sheriffe [William Sherriff], Sir Peter Parker, Lord Wm. Campbell, Lord Dunmore, Commodore Hotham, and many other officers of the Fleet & Army, to the number of 34 Persons. They all expressed great Satisfaction at their Entertainment, which indeed was worthy of the truly noble Personage who gave it.

In the Evening, the Syren came in from the South, with several Transports under her Convoy.

NARRATIVE OF COLONEL ETHAN ALLEN [1]

[Prison Sloop in Halifax Harbor, June 23 to August 15, 1776]

I sent letter after letter to captain Montagu [James Montagu], who still had the care of us, and also to his lieutenant, whose name I cannot call to mind, but could obtain no answer, much less a redress of grievances; and to add to the calamity, near a dozen of the prisoners were dangerously ill of the scurvy. I wrote private letters to the doctors, to procure, if possible, some remedy for the sick, but in vain. The chief physician came by in a boat, so close that the oars touched the sloop that we were in, and I uttered my complaint in the genteelest manner to him, but he never so much as turned his head, or made me any answer, though I continued speaking till he got out of hearing. Our case then became deplorable. Still I kept writing to the captain, till he ordered the guards, as they told me, not to bring any more letters from me to him. In the meantime an event happened worth relating. One of the men almost dead with the scurvy, lay by the side of the sloop, and a canoe of Indians coming by, he purchased two quarts of strawberries, and ate them at once, and it almost cured him. The money he gave for them was all the money he had in the world. After that we tried every way to procure more of that fruit, reasoning from analogy that they might have the same effect on others infested with the same disease, but could obtain none.

Meanwhile the doctor's mate of the Mercury came privately on board the prison sloop and presented me with a large vial of smart drops, which proved to be good for the scurvy though vegetables and some other ingredient were requisite for a cure; but the drops gave at least a check to the disease. This was a well-timed exertion of humanity, but the doctor's name has slipped my mind, and in my opinion, it was the means of saving the lives of several men.

The guard, which was set over us, was by this time touched with the feelings of compassion; and I finally trusted one of them with a letter of complaint to governor Arbuthnot, of Halifax, which he found means to communicate, and which had the desired effect; for the governor sent an officer and surgeon on board the prison sloop, to know the truth of the complaint. The officer's name was Russell who held the rank of lieutenant, and treated me in a friendly and polite manner, and was really angry at the cruel and unmanly usage the prisoners met with; and with the surgeon made a true report of matters to governor Arbuthnot, who, either by his orders or influence, took us next day from the prison sloop to Halifax jail, where I first became acquainted with the now Hon. [James] Lovel[l], one of the members of Congress for the state of Massachusetts. The sick were taken to the hospital, and the Canadians, who were effective, were employed in the King's works; and when their countrymen were recovered from the scurvy and joined them, they all deserted the King's employ, and were not heard of at Halifax, as long as the remainder of the prisoners continued there, which was till the middle of October. We were on board the prison sloop about six weeks, and were landed at Halifax near the middle of August.

New-England Chronicle, THURSDAY, AUGUST 15, 1776

Boston, August 15.

Yesterday se'nnight was sent into Portsmouth by the Hancock Vessel of War, belonging to the State of Pennsylvania, a large three-decked Ship, named the Reward, of between 5 and 600 Tons, (She was a 20 gun Ship last War, in the British Service,) now mounting 14 Guns; was from Tortola, bound to London, and had on board between 10 and 1100 Hogsheads of Sugar, 12 Bales of Cotton, and several Pieces of brass and iron Cannon. [1] We hear she was taken by the following Stratagem, viz. Just before dusk the Evening the Hancock came across her, the Captain of the Prize taking the Hancock to be one of the Tyrant's Pilferer's was very much rejoiced to fall in with her, and doubtless, vice versa, when the Hancock at Night threw out a Light for a Signal as a Pilot. At Day-light the next Morning, the Vessels being near together, the Captain of the Ship invited the Captain of the Hancock to come on board and take a Breakfast; who replied, his Hands were so few and sick, that he had not enough to man his Boat and work his Vessel, and in his Turn, invited the Captain of the Ship to come on board him, which he readily complied with by ordering his Boat out, when he and about a dozen of his Hands went on board the Hancock, and were taken as good Care of, as Men in such Circumstances could allow The Hancock then sent an equal Number of her own Hands on board the Ship, when, alas! she fell into the Hands of the United States of America.

There were on board the above Ship, a Number of Turtle directed to Lord North, with his Name cut in the Shell, the best of which, Capt. Wingate Newman, Master of the armed Vessel, is determined to send to the Hon. John Hancock.

The Prize Master, Mr. [William] Barton, informs, that the Hancock had taken a Brigantine from the West-Indies, just before this Ship, and sent her to Egg-Harbour, and was in chase of a Ship, supposed to be a Jamaica-man, and almost within gun-shot, when he left her.

1. The Hancock was not a Pennsylvania owned vessel, but a privateer, commissioned June 15, 1776. Libel was filed against the Reward on August 13, The Freeman's Journal, August 24, 1776.

JOURNAL OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS [1]

[Philadelphia] Thursday, August 15, 1776

The Congress resumed the consideration of the instructions given to Commodore Hopkins, his examination and answers, &c. and, thereupon, came to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the said Commodore Hopkins, during his cruize to the southward, did not pay due regard to the tenor of his instructions, whereby he was expressly directed to annoy the enemy's ships upon the coasts of the southern states; and, that his reasons for not going from Providence immediately to the Carolinas, are by no means satisfactory.

At the request of [the delegates of] Pennsylvania, the farther consideration of the report was postponed till to morrow.

Resolved, That the Secret Committee be directed to deliver to the order of the Marine Committee, such stores by them imported as are necessary for the fleet.

THOMAS JEFFERSON'S NOTES ON COMMODORE ESEK HOPKINS' DEFENSE [1]

Aug. 12. 1783 [sic 1776]. [2] [Philadelphia]

The Commodore'[s] excuse for not going to Souther[n] colonies agreeable to orders.

[Be]fore he left capes of Delaware, he heard the Liverpool was joined to Ld Dunmore, wch made enemy an overmatch. & many of his men sea sick.

he did not go to N. Carolina bec. [he] recd intelligce the enemy's force hd gone from there & from S. Cara to Georgia. (his men recovd as he got to the Southward) he did not go to S. Carola for same reason & because [he] had no pilots.

he did not go to Georg[ia] bec. enemy's ships as he heard were all there & too strong.
he app[ointe]d Abaco as a rendezvous, & to wait there 15 days for each other; he chose that place because nearer to Georga than to S. Carolina.
he got there with all his fleet except the Fly & Hornet, & as he was to wait 15 days for [them] he thought he might as well form [an] expedn somewhere.
he heard from (a whaler I believe) that there was 200 barrels of powder cannon &c at [New] Providce belonging to king. he therefore went there.
but the night he arrived the govr removed the powder. he took the cannon.
he dd nt go to Savanna becs while at Providce he heard all the enemy's fleet had assembled there & that [illegible] were too strong for him on his return North[ward] he took a bomb brig for which [he] recd thanks of Congress.
he carrd [the] cannon to Rhode isld rather than to the Carolinas because [they were] not wanting in the Carolinas & he thot he cd get more safely into Rhode isld he dd nt delivr them to Govr of Connecticut as ordd by Congress bec. he hd them as ballast, & found he cd nt get ballast at N. Lond[on] witht sendg to N. York, a delay wch he cd not admit as Gen. Washton wrote him he apprehendd the enemy wd attempt to block him up in N. London.
he delivd them to Govr Cook of Rh. isld bec. he offered him pig iron as ballast in lieu of them, & Govr Cook undertook to delivr them to ordr of Congress after he [returned] from Providce he was not at liberty to go to the Carolinas bec. hs instrns directed him to go to Rh. isld had nt pilots to carry him into inlets of N. Carolina or over Charles town bar.
Commodore dd nt sent vessel for intelligce into South. col. bec. both Fly & Hornet parted with him within 2 days after [they] sailed, in bad weather the Hornet nevr joined him, the Fly not till he got to Providce a clause in his instrns authorized him to depart from his instrns if in his discretn he thought [it] for the public good. if he was mistaken then it was no [crime.]
instrns are never given positively & it is right they should not be, because of change of circumstances
The Commodore had a premedetated design not to go to the Southern colonies but to Providence
bec. he dd nt send into Chesapk for certain intelligence.
bec. he dd nt send hs vessel of intelligce into N. Carolina but only sais he heard enemy hd left that place whereas in truth the Cruiser remd there alone & had above 50 prizes with her.
bec. he dd nt send in to So Carolina for intelligce he hd better [have] gone there for rendesvous than to Abaco bec. Gadsden hd promd him on seeing signals to sent out Pilot boats.

bec. he might have crossed the bar
bec. it was nearer to Georgia than Abaco was.
bec. 2 days before he got to Abaco he told major Nicholas he was to go to Providence, whereas he ss in his defence he did not intend to go there till he reached Abaco, (the rendezvous appointed) & then finding the Fly & H[ornet] separated he thought he might as well employ th[e] time of 15 days which was agreed on to wait there, in some expedn
The not meeting the Fly & Hornet cd not prevent him from going to Savannah bec. they were mere vessels of intelligce not of force, they only carried, one of them swivels, [the other] 3. or 4 lbrs
There was no cannon in N. Carola, so wre mch wantg there.
he was furnished wth 2 vessels on purpose to procure sure intelligce to direct his motions. particularly the Fly a very swift vessel was [bought] & fitted out on purpose.
after the expedn to Providce why did not he then go to Carolinas or Southern colonies, that being not only the main object of his expedn, but in truth the object of equipping the Navy.
his managemt of engagemt with Glasgow shews he wanted skill & activity.
Cannon nt wanting for ballast bec. two of his officers say she had still the ballast with which she had gone to Providce & returned.
He ot to have obeyed Congress in delivg cannon. tho' he was come out of the harbor of New London with the cannon on board; he ot to have retd wth them objection that he had no pilots to carry him into inlets of N. Carolina & bar of Charles town not good, because he knew that [before] when he set out why did not he inform [illegible] Comme before he went that it [might have] been provided for, or delegates [have] taken proper [measures] besides as to Charles town Gadsden hd agreed wth him fort Johnston had more king's cannon than Providce; if cannon hd bn his object [he] mt have gone & taken them at the time he retd from Providce there was the Cruiser & a tender wth Govr Martin waiting to join highlandrs & 16 mi. below them were a number of transports [with Clinton's army.]
he had the Wasp with him a small vessel proper to send in for intelligce from Ch[arles] to[wn] bar to Savanna bar 70. miles. from Abaco is 3 times as far.
besides it was in Winter season when Northerly winds prevail wch prevent his coming from Abaco to Savanna & facilitate it from Charles town the objn is [not] that he did not exercise an honest discretion in departing from his instrns but that he never did intend to obey them.
true all instrns have [a] discretionary clause, which proves they have some positive intention, otherwise there was never a positive instruction & never a disobediance of orders, which is not true since return from Providce the fleet has merely act[ed in] defence of trade of Eastrn colonies.

"Extract of a Letter from Cape Nicola Mole, August 15, 1776" [1]

From the best authority, I am informed, that four French frigates are ordered to cruize about this island to protect the American trade, and two Spanish ships are to do the same about Porto Rico for the like purpose. There are about 8 or 10,000 troops in this Island. – Twenty-nine ships of the line are getting ready at Brest, and 14 at Toulon, & 20,000 land forces, to put to sea, but where bound is not known. – Twelve Spanish ships of the line and 6 frigates, with many land forces, went by here some weeks past for the Havannah, but for what end is a secret.

. . . our business of building, and reconstructing are going on as fast as our paucity of proper hands, will admit of. After a very long passage the Twenty Glasgow Shipwrights, and ten house Carpenters, from Portsmouth, are at last arrived, and are to be hurried up to Chambly from Transport to Transport, Relays whereof are placed, with proper rowing Boats to ensure the Conveyance upwards of the provisions which are hourly and impatiently expected for the army from Ireland against an opposing Current, and the prevailing light Westerly Winds of the Season . . . .

His Excellency having applied to me for four Transports to carry away the Rebel Prisoners (as well those who were caught in the lower Town of Quebec on the 1st of January, as those since taken) with a view of their returning in peace to their respective homes. The Pearl is sailed with them under her Convoy for New York to join Lord Howe. Some Rebels taken very lately at Lake Champlain are to their very great surprise included in the number.

Three or four gentleman passengers, and a lady came in the above ship. – He likewise brought in with him the Sloop Industry, Capt William Hazen, bound to St. John's, in Nova-Scotia, in ballast.

A few days before the taking the above ship, Capt. Newman had a smart engagement with a sloop of war, of much superior force, for three glasses, but night coming on, they parted, both having received much damage, but on board of Capt. Newman no lives lost, nor none much hurt.

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM SKEENESBOROUGH, AUGUST 16, 1776" [1]

Our strength by sea is as follows, – two schooners, one sloop, two row-gallies and six gondolas, all fit for action. – At this place we have one gondola launched, and another just finished. – We have also three row-gallies in great forwardness, from 60 to 70 feet in keel and 16 feet beam, which will mount each 6 cannon and 20 swivels, and are to go with 36 oars besides sails – They will be fit for action in about three weeks – As soon as they are launched General Watterbury, with the regiment to which I belong, are ordered on board them, and when rigged, &c. are to proceed up the Lake to join the fleet.

By the last accounts from St. John's we learn, that the enemy had not more than 40 batteaus built, and two gallies or gondolas – If this is true, I hardly think they will venture down the Lake this fall – We are determined, however, to be prepared for them – Five other gallies are to be built here, as soon as those which are on the stocks are launched.

MEMOIRS OF MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM HEATH [1]

[New York, August] 16th. – Our General was again requested to be a spectator on the bank of the river the approaching night, with the most positive assurances that he should not be again disappointed: he accordingly went, attended as on the preceding time, and took a proper position on the bank. The night was pretty dark; they soon found that the galleys and fire-vessels were silently moving up with the tide. After some time, and almost immediately after the sentinels on board the British ships has passed the word, "all is well," two of the fire-vessels flashed into a blaze; the one close on the side of the Phenix, the other grappling one of the tenders. To appearance, the flames were against the side of the Phenix; and there was much confusion on board. A number of cannon were discharged into the fire-vessel in order to sink her. A number of seamen ascended, and got out on the yard-arm, supposed to clear away some grapplings. The fire-vessel was alongside, as was judged near ten minutes, when the Phenix either cut, or slipt her cable, let fall her fore-topsail, wore round, and stood up the river, being immediately veiled from the spectators, by the darkness of the night. The tender burnt down to the water's edge, and was towed to the shore by the Americans, out of which was taken, one iron six-pounder, two three-pounders, one two pounder, ten swivels, a caboose, some gun-barrels, cutlasses, grapplings, chains, &c. The Rose, and the other two tenders, remained at their moorings; but it was said that one of the tenders was deserted by her crew, for a time. Several of our galleys were said to have been inactive; otherwise, a very considerable advantage would have been reaped. The Americans sustained no loss or injury, saving one man, who, in communicating fire to one of the vessels, got considerably burnt in the face, hands, &c.[2]

JOURNAL OF JOHN PAUL JONES [1]

[May 10 to August 16, 1776]

The next day, the 10th of May, 1776, Mr. Jones was ordered by the commander in chief to take command "as captain of the Providence." This proves that Mr. Jones did his duty on the [New] Providence expedition. As the commander in chief had in his hand no blank-commission, this appointment was written and signed on the back of the commission that Mr. Jones had received at Philadelphia the 7th of December, 1775. Captain Jones had orders to receive on board the Providence the soldiers that had been borrowed from General Washington, and to carry them to New York, there enlist as many seamen as he could, and then return to New London, to take in from the hospital all the seamen that had been left there by the squadron, and were recovered, and carry them to Providence. Captain Jones soon performed these services; and having hove down the sloop and partly fitted her for war at Providence, he received orders from the commander in chief, dated Rhode Island, June 10th, 1776, to come immediately down to take a sloop then in sight, armed for war, belonging to the enemy's navy. Captain Jones obeyed orders with alacrity; but the enemy had disappeared before he reached Newport. On the 13th of June, 1776, Captain Jones received orders, dated that day at Newport, Rhode Island, from the commander in chief, to proceed to Newburyport to take under convoy some vessels bound for Philadelphia; but first to convoy Lieutenant Hacker in the Fly, with a cargo of cannon, into the sound for New York, and to convoy some vessels back from Stonington to the entrance of Newport. In performing these last services, Captain Jones found great difficulty from the enemy's frigates, then cruising round Block Island, with which he had several rencontres; in one of which he saved a brigantine that was a stranger, from Hispaniola, closely pursued by the Cerberus, and laden with public military stores. That brigantine was afterwards purchased by the Continent, and called the Hampden. Captain Jones received orders from the commander in chief to proceed for Boston instead of Newburyport. At Boston he was detained a considerable time by the backwardness of the agent. He arrived with his convoy from Boston, safe in the Delaware, the 1st of August, 1776. This service was performed while the enemy were arriving daily at Sandy Hook from Halifax and England, [under the escort and protection of Lord Howe,] and Captain Jones saw several of their ships of war [which he had the address to avoid.] Captain Jones received a captain's commission [under the United States of America,] from the president of Congress the 8th of August.

It was proposed to Captain Jones by the Marine Committee of Congress to go to Connecticut, to command the brigantine Hampden; but he choosing rather to remain in the sloop Providence, had orders to go out on a cruise against the enemy "for six weeks, [or] two or three months." He was not limited to any particular station or service.

Petition of Passengers on Board the Prize Ship Earl of Errol to the Massachusetts Council [1]

The Petition of Hugh Munro for himself, his Wife, Daughter, Neice, and Two Servants, Geo. Campbell & Servant, John Bar[slet], Child and two Servants and John Grant and his Servant,

Humbly Sheweth –

That your Petitioners left the Granadines the ninth day of July last in the Earl of Errol in order to proceed to London, to which Port they were bound, that in the Latitude of 33½° on the Twenty fourth of the said Month they were taken by Two ships belonging to Gentlemen of New York and bought into the Harbour of Boston [2]

That notwithstanding the Indulgence and good Usuage they have received since their Capture and the great Lenity shewn to them on their arrival here, They Beg Leave to request of the Honle Council to take into consideration, That being Passengers only on their way home, some for Health and others going to their Families, they Cannot but Labour under many Inconveniences unavoidable to the Situation they are in –

That sensible how ready the Gentlemen of the Council of this State have always been, to aleviate as much as possible Distresses of this Kind, They hope that the same favour that has been so obligingly Granted to Others, will not be withheld from them –

They therefore take the Liberty to inform the Honle Council that in consequence of the permission given to Mr [William] Ross (a Gentleman in Similar Circumstances with themselves) He has now purchased a Ship to proceed to Europe on the Terms allowed him, That this would be an opportunity to your Petitioners of the utmost importance to them, as it is hard to Say when another of the Kind might happen, should they be so unfortunate as to be refused this

On that account they presume to Solicit your Leave to be included on this occasion, which, if Granted, will do as much Honour to your Humanity as it will be doing favour to them

And your Petitioners as in Duty bound will ever Pray, &c &c.

About two OClock this Afternoon Colonel [Thomas] Hartly acquainted me, that a Party of his men who were posted Seven miles down the lake, as a Covering party to the Oar makers, had made a large fire as a Signal that the enemy were approaching I sent Colonel Hartly with one hundred men to secure the retreat of the Party if Attack'd and Order'd the two light Schooners down the lake to cover them, they were no sooner under way than Commadore Wynkoop fir'd a Shot & brought them too, and soon after sent me a note (Copy of which I Inclose with my Order to the Captains of the Schooners, and Answer to the Commadores note) I waited some time expecting the Vessells to sail but finding they did not I went on board the Commadore when he Order'd them under sail, he refuses to be commanded by any one and Imagines his Appointment, (which is by General Schuyler) cannot be superceded. I have shewn him such parts of your Instructions as I thought necessary, which has brought him so far to reason, he says if you think proper to turn him out he will quit the Vessell. I have given him to Understand that I shall at all events pursue your Orders, & that if he did not Incline to remain in the Service he would not be Compell'd to it. WHEREAS a Bombardment and Attack upon the City of New-York, by our cruel and inveterate Enemy, may be hourly expected: And as there are great Numbers of Women, Children, and infirm Perſons, yet remaining in the City, whoſe Continuance will rather be prejudicial than advantageous to the Army, and their Perſons expoſed to great Danger and Hazard: I Do therefore recommend it to all ſuch Perſons, as they value their own Safety and Preſervation, to remove with all Expedition, out of the ſaid Town, at this critical Period,—truſting, that with the Bleſſing of Heaven, upon the American Arms, they may ſoon return to it in perfect Security. And I do enjoin and require all the Officers and Soldiers in the Army, under my Command, to forward and aſſiſt ſuch Perſons in their Compliance with this Recommendation.

GIVEN under my Hand, at Head-Quarters, New-York, Auguſt 17, 1776.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

NEW-YORK:—Printed by JOHN HOLT, in Water-Street.

Lady Washington galley and Independence were conducted with great judgment and bravery. I wish I could say that the other galleys did any thing at all.[2] The Phoenix either slipt or cut her cable; the Rose was left alone, and it is thought might have been taken. I was an eye-witness to the whole; and from the confusion which was apparent, I am confident that if an attempt should be made on the fleet below, and but one or two ships set on fire, their confusion would be beyond description.

GEORGE WASHINGTON TO VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE [1]

Head Quarters New York Augt 17th 1776.

My Lord, Being authorized by Congress, as their Commanders in every Department are, to Negotiate an Exchange of Prisoners; and presuming, as well from the nature of your Lordship's command, as the Information that General Howe has been pleased to honor me with, that the exchange in the Naval Line will be subject to your Lordship's Directions, I beg leave to propose the following mode of Exchange for your Lordship's consideration, vizt "Officers for those of equal Rank and Sailors for Sailors."

If the above proposal should be agreeable to your Lordship, I am charged in a particular manner to exchange any Officer belonging to the British Navy in our hands & of equal Rank, for Lieut [James] Josiah, who was lately made prisoner in a ship retaken by the Cerberus frigate.

The reason, my Lord, of my being charged to propose the exchange of Lieut Josiah, in preference to that of any other officer, is that authentic Intelligence has been received, that regardless of his Rank, as an Officer, he has not only been subjected to the duties of a common Seaman, but has experienced many other Marks of Indignity.

As a different Line of conduct, my Lord, has been ever observed towards the Officers of your navy, who have fallen into our Hands, It becomes not only a matter of Right, but of Duty, to mention this to your Lordship, to the end that an Inquiry may be made into the case above referred to.

From your Lordship's character for Humanity, I am led to presume, the Hardships imposed on Lieut Josiah, are without either your Knowledge or concurrence, and therefore most readily hope that upon this representation, your Lordship will enjoin all Officers under your command, to pay such regard to the Treatment of those that may fall into their Hands, as their different ranks and Situations require, and such as your Lordship would wish to see continued by us to those, who are already in our power, or who may hereafter, by the chance of War, be subjected to it. I have the honor to be My Lord with great respect Your Lordships's [&c.]

JOHN ADAMS TO JAMES WARREN [1]

[Extract] Philadelphia, August 17. 1776

Another Subject of great Importance, We ought to have been informed of, I mean your Navy. or We ought to have known the Number of your armed Vessells, their Tonnage, their Number of Guns, Weight of Metal, Number of Men, Officers Names Ranks and Characters. in short, you should have given Us your compleat Army and Navy Lists – besides this one would have thought We should have been informed, by Some Means or other of the Privateers fitted out in your State – their Size, Tonnage, Guns, Men, Officers' Names and Characters. But in all these Respects I declare myself as ignorant, as the Duke De Choiseul, and I Suspect much more So. – our People have a curious Way of telling a Story. "The Continental Cruizers Hancock and Franklin took a Noble Prize." Ay! but who knows any Thing about the Said Cruizers. – How large are they? how many Guns? 6. 9. 12. 18 or 24 Pounders? how many Men? who was the Commander? These Questions are asked me So often, that I am ashamed to repeat my Answer, I don't know. I can't tell. I have not heard. our Province have never informed me. –[2] The Reputation of the Province, the Character of your officers, and the real Interests of both Suffer inexpressibly by this Inaccuracy and Negligence – look into Coll [Archibald] Campbells Letter. with what Precision he States every particular of his own force, of the Force of his Adversary, and how exact is his Narration of Facts and Circumstances, Step by Step? – When shall We acquire equal Wisdom? Pains to get Men of thorough Education and Accomplishment into every Department, civil military and naval. . . .

MAJOR GENERAL HORATIO GATES TO MAJOR GENERAL PHILIP SCHUYLER [1]

Dear General Ticonderoga, 18th August 1776

Thursday, General Arnold went to Crown Point to take the command of the Fleet, collected there, Inclosed is a Copy of my Orders to him, which he read and much approved, before his departure from hence, – Late, last night, I received the within Letter from the General, with an Extract of what passed between him and Mr [Jacobus] Wynkoop, which you will also find in the Packet, together with my Letter at Day-Light this Morning, in consequence of General Arnold's Letter to me I shall send Mr Wynkoop to Albany immediately on his arrival here, and I dare say you will without Scruple, forthwith dismiss him the Service – He ought, upon no account, to be again employed. Many Officers of rank in this department say, he is totally unfit to command a single vessel, at this important hour of business – I would not submit this Affair, to a General Court martial here, least they should have doubts how to decide upon it, as the Continental Articles of war make no Provision for so extraordinary a circumstance – The Times will not admit of trifling – Decision alone must govern these Occasions –

I expect Genl [David] Waterbury by Saturday Night, with the Row Gallies. As he is an able Seaman and a brave Officer, I intend he shall join Genl Arnold with the rest of the Squadron the Instant they can be armed & equipped – As Genl Arnold and he are upon the best terms, I am satisfied no Dispute about command, or want of Confidence in each other, will retard the public service – I am Dr Genl [&c.]

Memoirs of William Smith [1]

[Haverstraw] 18 Do [August]

The Phoenix and Rose shot by all the Forts & got down to Staten Island thro' the Delays in obstructing the Channel. They have created some Expence to the Continent in the Land Carriage of Provisions from Philadelphia to New York – Had they brought up a 1000 spare Hands, they might have spread Fire all along the Shores up to the Highland Forts. It is difficult to say who is most to blame the British General for sending them up so weak or the American one for suffering them to escape when the Feet of the neighbouring Cliffs on the West Side of Hudson's River furnished moveable Stone & the River Sloops for shutting them in – A Deserter who had assisted in sinking the Vessels was their Pilot thro' the Gut left unfinished.

MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM HEATH TO GEORGE WASHINGTON [1]

[Extract] Kings Bridge Augst 18th 1776

Dear General Early this morning The Phenix man of war, Rose Frigate, and the Two Tenders Came to Sail and stood Down the River, Keeping Close under the East shore, in Order to avoid the Fire of our Cannon, But notwithstanding this Precaution the Phenix was Thrice Hull'd by our Shot from mount Washington, and One of the Tenders Once, – The Rose was Hull'd once by a shot from Burdits Ferry – They Kept their men Close, otherwise Some of them would have been picked Down by a Party of Riflemen who were Posted on the Bank, – They fired Grape shot as they Passed, But did no Damage save to one Tent we hope to hear that your Batteries have Done the work for some of them, – We shall recover Some Swivel Guns, Gun Barrels, shot &c Out of the Wreck of the Tender which was Burnt the Other night, the Particulars of which shall be Transmitted to your Excellency as soon as I can obtain them . . . The ships have now tryed the Practicability of Passing our works They have Explored every part of the shore as far as they have gone up the River, and Sounded the River in almost every Place, should the ships rejoyn the Fleet with out Receiving much Damage, I think How[e] will be Emboldened to Attempt an Attack some where above this Place, thinking that there may be a greater probability of succeeding here, than in the Face of so many, and Strong works, as have been Erected in and around the City, – However should his Inclination lead him this way, nature has Done much for us, and we shall as fast as Possable add the Strength of art, . . .

I have Just now received your Excellencys Command, to Enquire into the Cause of the Inactivity of some of the Row Gallies in the late attack on the Enemys' ships but as the Gallies have all Left this Post and fallen Down to the City I must beg your Excellency to Excuse me from that Service –

GEORGE WASHINGTON TO GOVERNOR JONATHAN TRUMBULL [1]

[Extract] New York Augt 18th – 1776

I am happy Capt Van Buren has succeeded so well in the business he was upon, it being of great consequence for us to fit out and maintain our vessels on the Lake –

On the night of the 16th two of our Fire Vessels attempted to burn the Ships of War up the River. One of them boarded the Phoenix of 44 Guns and was grappled with her for some minutes, but unluckily she cleared herself – The only damage the Enemy sustained was the destruction of one Tender. It is agreed on all hands that our people engaged on this affair behaved with great resolution and intrepedity. One of the Captains —— Thomas – it is to be feared perished in the attempt, or in making his escape by swimming, as he has not been heard of – His bravery entitled him to a better fate – Though this enterprise did not succeed to our wishes, I incline to think it alarmed the Enemy greatly – For this morning the Phoenix and Rose with their two remaining Tenders taking the advantage of a brisk and prosperous gale with a favorable tide, quitted their stations and have returned and joined the rest of the Fleet – As they passed our several Batteries they were fired upon, but without any damage that I could perceive –

The whole of the British Force in America, except those employed in Canada, are now here; [Henry] Clinton's arrival being followed the last week by that of Lord Dunmore who now form a part of the Army we are to oppose. His coming has not added but little to their strength – I have the honor to be with great respect Sir [&c.]

LIEUTENANT COLONEL WILLIAM TUDOR TO JOHN ADAMS [1]

[Extract] New York 18th Augst 1776

Dear Sir It was with no small Degree of Pleasure, on my Return here, I observed the Cheerfulness which brightened the Countenance of every Soldier I met. The whole Army are in most excellent Spirits & shew an Impatience for Action And the Spade & Pick Ax have been so well employ'd, that there is scarce a Spot upon the whole Island, where a Redoubt or Breast Work could be of service, but what has either one or other. From the Advantages we now possess, I think General Howe must be repulsed whenever he attacks, but should he be able to carry the Island, it must be with so prodigious a Loss that Victory will be Ruin. He must get Winter Quarters for his Troops somewhere, & I am afraid if he can't get them in York, he will once more attempt it in Boston. Their Command of the Sea gives them vast Advantages.

[On board H. M. S. Eagle]
Sunday, 18th. August.

This Morning, the Wind being strong at N E and the Weather hazy, the Phoenix and the Rose, with two Tenders, came down the River, in Defiance of all the Efforts of the Rebels from Batteries, Cheveaux de Frize, &c. Not one of all their Shots struck the Phoenix, and but one or two the Rose, and those did but little Damage. One man only was wounded by a Splinter in the Leg. The Rebels kept up an incessant Fire from all their Guns, many of the Shot from which we saw falling very short of their objects. The Ships, on the other hand, returned a smart Fire, and came down, with Sails set and Colours flying, till they joined the Fleet. A young Man came off from the Shore in a Canoe, and got on board the Ships, by whom we find, that the former Accounts of the Situation of the Rebels were true, and that many among them wd. be glad to leave their Service. A Captain Hornneck, an Engineer, who came off with him, was drowned by the Canoes striking against the Rose. They tried to save the poor Gentleman, but in vain, as they could not stay for him, being in the midst of the Rebels' Fire. This was regretted as a capital Loss. Capt. [James] Wallace explained the Reason of the great Fire we saw two Nights ago. The Rebels had fitted up a large Brig as a Fire-ship, which came very close to the Phoenix, but did no Sort of Damage. It was well constructed for its purpose, which the activity of our People defeated.

18th [August] Sunday — This night and morning blowing and raining very hard. At five o'clock in the morning or a little after, heard a heavy cannonade up the North River; it continued to increase, and came nearer to us. About seven o'clock all the batteries in and near the town and opposite shore were firing away very fast; at this time very thick, raining and blowing. A little before eight the Phoenix, Rose, Trial schooner, and Shuldham sloop, appeared in sight close to Bedloe's Island. The two ships fired away on both sides, and soon after anchored here at Staten Island. The ships received no damage whatever, and not one shot struck the Phoenix; the Rose had two men slightly wounded.

[Extract] Portsmo August 19th 1776

My Friends Your favours of the 5th instant I've recd and most heartily rejoice with you at the Success of our Arms, in taking so many Prizes, they are continually coming in here – Capt Brown in a small Sloop has just arriv'd here from Holland, belonging to Colonel [Isaac] Sears of New York and others, she is Loaden with Medicines Linnens &c valuable Cargo. –

If the Committee had let me have the Guns for this Ship, when they have been laying at Providence near two Months, and the Ships there not ready to receive them we should no doubt have taken more Prizes, then would have paid for our whole Fleet, however by some fatelity or false information we have been kep't from them –

Our people are Entring on board Privateers very fast, so that we shall have few hands left for the Continent, all this for want of Guns for our Ship, the people do not like to Enter, without Guns, as they want to be out after Prize Money –

Sir Salem 19th Augt 1776

As my Health will not permit me to attend my Duty at the Board at Present, I take the freedom to Inform You that the Brigg Massachusetts is nearly fixed & has onbord 97 Men, 2/3 of which having Entered within this 4 Days.

Nothing seems now to be wanting but 4 or six Guns, & three Small sails, & both Guns & sails I find to be totally out of my Power to Procure, without the Aid of the Councill or [General] Court, – there is a Ship at Danvers which I Suppose is owned in London, she has been Launched I beli[ev]e 18 months & has a Compleat Suit of Sails, the Value of the three Sails I Want, in Common times would not be more than £15–, I have offered the Capt of this ship twice that money for them, & tho' there is not the least Probability of his Getting away, he will not Part with them, I have Endeavoured to Borrow them, & to oblige my Self to Replace them when, he should want them, but all to no Purpose, I Do not Love to use force, but, Circumstances Considerd, is it not Reasonable that the Board should furnish me with an Order to take them? if they Do I could wish to have it on the Morrow.

And if the Board will furnish me with an Order on the Commissary, or which will be better Direct Collo [Thomas] Crafts to Deliver Capt [Daniel] Souther four or six Suitable Guns from any Place from wherever they Can be most Conveniently Spared, I Can soon have them. Collo Crafts Informs me that there are two Ship Six pounders onboard the Rowe Gally, I think they Call it, and Certainly they are of no sort of use there, no[r] Do I think they ever Can be while they Remain Onbord her, & therefore I hope the Board will have no Objection, to those Guns being Orderd onbord the Massachusetts. there are two others, Capt [Caleb] Hopkins informs me, now on Long Wharfe which he Landed out of the George Guard ship, these may, I think, be Spared & Collo Crafts has some others as the Guns now wanted for this Vessell, are not Large Enough to be used to any Great Advantage in Batterys, I know of no Place where they Can at Present be so usefully Employed as onbord this Brigg, but if the Board are of a Different oppinion, the Vessell must Lay by. I have taken, Almost, Infinite Trouble to Get as many as I have, and more 'tis not Posable for me to procure at any Rate, – May I ask the favour of your Honor to urge this matter & Let me know the Result of your Endeavours as soon as Possable? PRESIDENT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS COUNCIL TO AARON HUBBARD [1]

In Council Watertown Aug. 19. 1776

The Board are greatly concerned that the Cannon which they contracted for with you several months ago, are not yet ready. – They have several Vessels now manned & fitted for the sea, with every article except cannon. By this, a very great expence is daily incurred by the Government, and not the least advantage derived from it; nor can be, till the Vessels are furnished with the cannon which are expected from you. The Board therefore most earnestly urge you to make all possible dispatch in this affair, and to postpone every other business till this is finished.

In the name & by order of the Board

New York, August 19.

A Brig belonging to this Port, arrived last Sunday safe in a Harbour on Long Island, with a valuable Cargo from Lisbon, chiefly consisting of Powder and Salt. The Captain informs us, that a large French Fleet lay off Cape St. Vincent's, and that two British Frigates were cruizing about to watch their Motions. Another brig, also belonging to this Port, in Company with him, was taken by one of the British Pirates, off Bermuda.

Every Tide we expect an Attack will be made on this City from the piratical Fleet at Staten-Island.

VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE TO GEORGE WASHINGTON [1]

Sir, Eagle off Staten Island, 19th August 1776.

Concurring with the proposition you have been pleased to make in your favor of the seventeenth for an exchange of prisoners in my department, viz. "Officers for those of equal rank, and sailors for sailors," I will take the liberty to propose an officer of the same rank with Lieut. [James] Josiah, when he arrives.

The Cerberus being absent, I have no other information respecting the situation of Mr. Josiah, than what is communicated in your letter. But the matter, you may be assured, shall be inquired into, and every attention paid to the rules of propriety, as well as the dictates of humanity, on all such occasions.

Principles and conduct form the true distinction of rank among men; yet, without a competent habit in the manners of the world, they are too liable to meet with unmerited disregard. But insult and indignities, to persons of whatever rank, who are become parties in these unhappy disputes, cannot be justified, and are, I persuade myself, as much disapproved of by every officer under my command, as they can never cease to be by me. I am, with great personal respect, Sir [&c.]

Howe.

SECRET COMMITTEE OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS TO COUNT D'ENNERY, GOVERNOR OF SANTO DOMINGO [1]

[Copy] Philadelphia August 20th 1776

Sir, It is impossible that at this date you can be a stranger to the important contest subsisting Between Great Britain and her (late) colonies, Neither can it be necessary for us to enter into any detail of the Origin, or history of the progress of the dispute, sufficient it is for our present purpose to inform your Excellency, that the good people of America grown quite impatient under the yoke of tyranny, and sore with the cruelty's Daily practised against them, have at length determined to shake of[f] the yoke and oppose at the revoque of every thing that is sacred and dear to mankind the future opperations of that government w[h]ich had determined to seize with a strong hand their property, and in violation of all natural, moral & Civil obligations to annihilate their liberty

These being the avowed purposes of the court of great Britain, pursued with the utmost violence, notwithstanding the many and frequent representations, and supplications of this people, their delegates in General Congress did resolve in July last to shake of[f] their dependence on such oppressors and to set up for free and independant States, as you will see by the printed declaration wich we have the honor to inclose we depend principaly on the Virtue and Strength of our people to support this state of independancy, wich was loudly called for by them and received with universal marks of joy and approbation, but that we might not be wanting in any part of that duty we owe to ourselves, and posterity, we have sent a person to the Court of france to represent our present situation, and to sollicit a favourable disposition toward [us] as we are well assure[d] of the mutual and important advantages that will arise to both Country's from an alliance founded on just principles and supported by commercial intercourse.

The Court of france Cannot be insensible to her Own interest, and we have (uncertain) information that our resident is arrived and has meet a most favourable reception, but from himself we have not yet received any advice we have also sent a young Gentleman to reside for some time at Martinico for commercial purposes. he has been favourably received, and informs us by authority of the general, that our Commerce will meet with Encouragement and protection in that island as we Know well that the island of hispagnolia has Constant occasion for the produce of these states, and Vice Versa, these states will require large supplies of the produce of that island, we have been led by the consideration of mutual benefits to intrude upon your Excellency['s] time and to solicit your protection, and Encouragement of the Commerce Carried on between our inhabitants and yours. we do not Mean by this to Express a Wish that your Excellency should depart from the line of your duty, or that our people should interfere with the municipal laws and regulations of your Country:

but we are well assured that the favorable Countenance of a Governor will greatly Encourage an infant commerce, and will paliate and Excuse such errors, neglects or crimes against the rules or laws as arise from ignorance of them the great painstaking and the vigilance used by our Enemies to deprive us of the necessary supplies of arms and ammunition, has made it necessary for the Congress to institute a trading Committee, stiled the Secret Committee with full powers to pursue such commerce as may be most likely to procure the articles wanted for the public Service. we the undersigned are members of that committee and members of the general Congress as will appear by the Certificate from our president & Secretary. in consequence of the power we are Vested With, and of advice we have lately received of arms and ammunitions being now very plenty in your island, we have sent a young italian Gentleman that had resided here a Considerable time and is warmly attached to our Cause, to Cape francois, where We propose he s[h]ould remain for the purpose of receiving the Cargoes we send him, and shipping in return the articles we may order. his name is Mr Stephen Ceronio a Gent'n of good family at Genoa, and of exceeding good character and we beg to recommend him to your Excellency['s] Patronage, and protection during his Stay on the island, not doubting but his Own Merit will recommend himself to your frendship and Civilities, Should he at any time have opportunitys of purchassing Such goods as we Want, and not have sufficient effects in hand we beg your Excellency would in such Cases assure the Owners of them, that we shall Constantly remit him sufficient to discharge all Contracts he makes for our Account

We hope a fovourable acceptance of this application and have the honor to be your Excellency [&c.]

VERDICT AND DECREE IN THE CASE OF THE PRIZE BRIGANTINE Elizabeth [1]

Colony of New Hampshire
Rockingham ss

At a Court Maritime held before the Honble Joshua Brackett Esqr at Portsmouth in the County of Rockingham for the Colony of New Hampshire on the twenty first Day of August Anno Domini 1776 –

The Information and Libel of Joshua Wentworth of Portsmouth in the County of Rockingham in the Colony aforesaid Esqr for and in behalf of the united American Colonies and also in behalf of the Officers Marines and Mariners of the three continental armed Vessels named Hancock, Lee and Lynch against the Brigantine named the Elizabeth her Cargo and Appurtenances being of the Burthen of about one hundred and forty tons commanded by Peter Ramsey – the Libellant in behalf of said Colonies and of the Officers Marines and Mariners of said three armed Vessels Sheweth that John Manly Commander of the said continental armed Vessel named Hancock, Daniel Waters Commander of the said Continental armed Vessel named Lee & John Ayres Commander of the said Continental armed Vessel named Lynch with the Officers Marines and Mariners of said three armed Vessels did on or about the third Day of April A.D. 1776 (said three armed Vessels being then in the Service of the united Colonies) seize & retake, upon the high Seas and bring into the port of Piscataqua in said County the said Brigantine of about one hundred and forty tons Burthen then commanded by Peter Ramsey – which Brigantine at the time of the Recapture thereof, was in the Possession of the Enemy & had been taken from Richard Hart of said Portsmouth Mercht late Owner thereof by some armed Vessel belonging to the fleet employed against the united Colonies and detained in their possession more than ninety six hours then next preceeding the time of her being retaken as aforesaid, Which same Brigantine at the time of the recapture thereof had on board a Cargo consisting of divers Good Wares & Merchandizes together with four Negroes – which Cargo She was then carrying to the fleet and Army employd against the united Colonies – By means whereof by the Law of said Colony in such case made and provided the said Brigantine her Cargo and Appurtenances ought to be condemned – Wherefor the Libellant in manner aforesaid prays Process against the Premises and that the same may be condemned and disposed of as the Law directs – William Jackson Wm and Jas Jackson, Samuel Austin, John Leverett, Robert Ruggles Samuel Dashwood, Cyrus Baldwin, Edward Keighly, Thomas Drowne, Samuel Whitwell, Adam Rupp, Richard Newton, Samuel Parkman, John Barrett and sons, Jona Williams, John Rowe, William Breck, Abigail Berry, William Burke, Francis Shaw – Saml Ruggles, John Lowell Warden of old North, Benja Austin Mary Williams Nathan Frazier, Samuel Patridge James Jackson & Richard Hart also at the same time, put in their several Claims to said Brigt and part of her Cargo (as on file [)]. Whereupon after a full hearing of the parties by their Counsel learned in the Law, together with their respective evidences, the case was committed to a Jury duly sworn to try the same according to Law and Evidence – who return their verdict and say – "That the said Brigantine at the time of her being so taken had not before been made a Lawful prize of by the enemy, neither was she at that time carrying her cargo to and for the use of the fleet and Army employed against the united Colonies, & that the several claimants that have filed their claims in this Court for part of her Cargo, ought to have the same restored to them and that Capt Burk properly belonged to the fleet at the time of her being taken and that the Jury had no evidence respecting the Goods that were not claimed."

All which, being seen and understood by the Court it is considered and decreed by the Court that the said Brigt and so much of her Cargo, claimed by the several claimants as is mentioned in their claims on file be restored to them according to their respective claims, and that the claimants recover their legal Costs of Court from which decree and sentence of the Court the said Joshua Wentworth Esqr in behalf of the united Colonies and Captors pray'd an appeal to the American Congress – which is granted Him – he giving security to prosecute the same with Effect according to Law. Sir Aug. 21 1776

The Captains of the Row Gallies having much resented the Suspicions formed of them for their Behaviour up the River as well as when the Men of War passed this Place intimated to the General that they supposed the Situation of the Times would not admit of a Trial or they should call for one. The General has thought proper to take them at their Offer & ordered a Court of Inquiry to sit next Friday – As you seemed to be of Opinion there was a Failure of Duty when they went up last Week, the General desires you would collect such Evidence of their Behaviour as you think will put the Matter in the proper Light & send the Witnesses down here by that Day at 10 oClock. – As Genl [Thomas] Mifflin seems to have been particularly attentive to their Behaviour the General thinks his Testimony may be of Service & would have him attend if he can be spared –

[New York, August 21]

A flag of truce come from the Enemy the 20 Instant the 21 General Washington sent A flag in, and at Evening the General sent the Brigadds to prepare themselvs for an Attack for undoubtedly the Enemy was Embark'd, that we may depend on their coming out this evening or tomorrow Morning

We Learn by authority that the enemy only wait for wind and tide, that they are in readiness for an attack have Embarkd suppose to attack Long Island Powls Hook and the Jerseys, their number imputed to 35 thousand, although it seems incredible, the information we suppose comes from a Spie that we have among them, this information came from the Island the 21st Instant, the manner I cannot describe but no doubt very Privatly some way or other

we learn that the Enemy are very sickly and no doubt it may Prove true, as they have very Little but salt Provisions

New-York, August 21.

For some days past, the British army on Staten Island, have been embarking on board the transports; so that we expect their whole force before this city every tide. We hope to give them a reception, worthy the free born sons of America, and may every freemen of America make this his Toast, That New York is now an assylum for American Liberty.

Yesterday a number of the ministerial fleet left their station at Staten-Island, and went through the Narrows; it is supposed they mean to land part of their troops on Long-Island.

Lieutenant Elias Baldwin to Solomon Porter, Danbury Merchant [1]

[Extract] New York Augt. 21, 1776

We are in great Expectation of an Attack this Day. A Spy went over I hear from Amboy some days since Returned Yesterday – says they were to make the attack this day, in 3 places, on long Island – at Amboy – & North of the City from the North River Perhaps their sails being very wet from the Shower last Evening & the wind a head this morning may prevent the Attack this Day. The Army Numerous, tho' how numerous I cant learn & In high spirits. That I doubt whether we shall ever be better prepared for them than now. The Connecticut Militia are mostly arrived. Some Troops have come in from the Southward how many cant learn. – Sickness I believe abates in the Army since the Rains – of which there hath been great Plenty this way. But I can't tell with much Certainty. –

3 oClock afternoon.

About one all the Militia from Connecticut paraded together 12 or 13 Regiments amounting probably to between 5 & 6000 Men – the greatest Number [of] Men under Arms that ever I saw were vie[wed] by General Washington & most of the other General Officers. The Colonels are to wait upon the Generals at 5 to receive more particular ord[ers]. Tis Reported the Enemy have landed at the sout[h]ern Extremity of long Island. I saw several fires In that part of the Island – w[hich] tis conjectured are the Inhabitants burning their hay – Grain &c to prevent th[e] Enemy's receiving benefit therefrom. Tis not Improbable some attack may be made on the Morrow – The Critical Moment probably is not far of[f]. – May God preserve us & give such sucess as shall effectually secure our dear previleges – that we may be a free people as long as the sun & moon shall endure – All seem to be in high spirits . . .

[Extract] Philadelphia, August 21, 1776

The success of your Privateers is incouraging. I lament with you the Languor and Inattention to the Fleet. I wish I could explain to you my Sentiments upon this Subject, but I will not. I am determined you shall come here, and see, and hear, and feel for yourself, and that Major [Joseph] Hawley and Some others shall do the same. I must not write Strictures upon Characters. I set all Mankind a Swearing if I do. I must not point out to you, not even to you, the Causes of the Losses, Disgraces, and Misfortunes, that befall you. I make the Faces of my best Friends a mile long if I do. What then shall I do? Just what I have long Since determined, go home, and let two or three of you come here and fret yourselves, as long as I have done, untill you shall acknowledge that I had Reason.

There is a Marine Committee, who have the Care of every Thing relating to the Navy. Hopkins and his Captains, Saltonstall, and Whipple, have been summoned here, and here they have lingered and their ships laid idle. I cannot, I will not explain this Business to you; because if I should, it would get into a News Paper, I suppose. You must come and see.

We suffer inexpressibly for Want of Men of Business. – Men acquainted with War by Sea and Land, Men who have no Pleasure but in Business. You have them, send them along.

Have you got Boston Harbour sufficiently fortified? If not take no Rest until it is done. [William] Howe must have Winter Quarters, somewhere. If he can't obtain them at New York, he must attempt them at the Southward or Northward, it will be your Fault, if you are not prepared for him in the North. . . .

P.S. One [William] Woodcock, at Wilmington, has been speaking to me about a privateer he was applied to to build by Captain [Charles] Pope. He says he has a parcel of carpenters sent to him and cannot go on for want of the iron-work, rum, &c. Some person among you ought to go immediately and enter into a contract with him and find the means of supplying him.

A Petition from Joseph Greenway, third Lieut. of the Ship Montgomery, in the service of this State, was laid before the Board, praying that he may have leave to resign his Commission, as he has an opportunity of serving his Country in a more essential manner than he is now able to do, which request was granted, and he is discharged from the Service aforesaid.

Thomas Jones to the Maryland Council of Safety [1]

Virginia Northumberld County August 21st 1776

Gentlemen I have delivered to Mr Thos Walker at the request of Captn

Nicholson, four hundred & thirty two half barrels of Gun-Powder, Eighteen Chests of Arms, four loose Muskets, and Twenty peices of Oznabrigs, Mr Walker tells me he received only 431 half barrels of Powder, the Persons I entrusted to deliver it, are certain they delivered the whole quantity. I hope it will be found right. – Assoon as I was informed by Captn [Thomas] Conway of his arrival,[2] and that the Powder &c was landed, & stored not more than two Miles from navigation in the lower end of the County, I thought it by no means a safe place for so valuable Cargoe, especially as Lord Dunmores Fleet was lying at no great distance from it, therefore I directed it to be carted about 12 or 14 Miles higher up the County, where it might be more immediately under my own inspection, this, together with the necessity of keeping a constant guard, has occasioned a considerable expence, but not more I hope than will be thought requisite. The several accounts were lay'd before the Committie, who regulated them as they thought proper, except some few, which I made a particular agreement for.—You may be assured Gent. that I have acted as if it had been upon my own account, and the trouble I have been at, you are exceedingly welcome to. I think myself happy in having had it in my power to serve the Province of Maryland, particularly on so interesting an occasion.

Thos Jones

P. S. There is a ballance still due to the Colony of Virga of £3..18..2 which Captn Walker has promised to pay. I am with regard Gent: [&c.]

2. The case of the Vulcan generated lengthy litigation. John Lyon and John Kellum claimed to be the real captors. James Ingram of Norfolk, owner of the Vulcan, claimed that necessity forced him to join Dunmore. He contended that the sloop never carried "Supplies to the Ministerial Army," and could not be taken as a legal prize. Governor Patrick Tonyn to Lord George Germain [1]

No 21

My Lord;

The unlucky turn the naval operations took at Charlestown makes a very considerable change in the situation of affairs in this Province.

It was thought expedient for the benefit of this Province to summon the Inhabitants to meet me at the Statehouse yesterday morning.

After mentioning a few outlines of the present situation of public Affairs, and recommending a manly spirit to be exerted in defence of the Province, and that it was the duty of every man in these bad times to shew his loyalty and allegiance to the best of Kings, and his duty and affection to the british Constitution; I proposed to them to be embodied into a Battalion of Militia. I have the satisfaction to inform your Lordship, that the whole joyfully consented without a dissenting voice, they testified their readiness to comply with whatever I thought fitest for them, and would go wherever I should lead them in defence of the Province.

I then declared Lieutenant Governor [John] Moultrie to be their Colonel, Robert Bisset Esqr Lieutenant Colonel, and Benjamin Dodd Esqr Major, which gave general satisfaction.

The Companies are to be composed of a Captain, a Lieutenant, two Serjeants, two Corporals, and twenty five private Sentrys.

Two Companies of the Battalion will be raised at Saint John River. I expect four here. I fear by what Colonel Bisset mentions, we cannot venture to raise at Doctor Turnbull's Settlement more than one Company, but in the other Settlements in these parts, we shall be able to raise four black Companies, to which must be given double or treble white Officers, in proportion to the Officers of the white Companies.

If these measures meet your Lordships approbation, I shall be happy. I have the honour to be with the greatest respect [&c.]

Governor Jonathan Trumbull to John Hancock [1]

[Extract] Lebanon August 22d 1776

Sir Since my last I have not been honored with any of your favors, yet as it is proper Congress should be acquainted what is doing in each of the United States for Common Defence, especially what is doing on Continental Account, I take the liberty of giving you the following detail of what is done, & doing in this State –

Upon the Request of General Washington, our three Row-Galleys were sent to New York; and are there in Continental Service –

Colol [Samuel] Elmore's Regiment. agreeable to a resolve of Congress communicated by General Washington, is ordered to join the Army at New York – Upon the General's request, Twenty Cannon, ten 12 and ten 6 pounders cast at our Foundery at Salisbury, are lent, to be used for the defence of the North River, and to prevent the Ships from destroying the Continental Frigates building there, and making depredations on the Country –

Upon General Schuyler's request, three Sea Captains are appointed here, to raise Crews of Seamen, and proceed to Lake Champlain, and take command of some of the armed vessels on the Lake – To enable them to enlist their men, we have advanced the necessary sums out of our Treasury, to be reimbursed from the Chest at Albany –

A quantity of Cordage and Rigging, upon General Schuylers application, have been purchased in this State and at his request, Two Hundred Swivels will be cast with all expedition for the use of the armed vessels on Lake Champlain. [2]

Last Saturday Capt Hinman of your armed Brig Cabot presented me a letter from Colo [Gurdon] Saltonstall, directing the former to ask my opinion relative to his sailing on a Cruise – Considering that he had been long waiting in readiness; that the multiplicity of business in Congress is the probable reason of his not receiving orders for it; that the expence is great; that his Sailing may prove beneficial; that the season and opportunity of going out with Captains [Seth] Harding and [William] Packwood in armed vessels afford a prospect of distressing our Enemies and of helping these States – I gave him my opinion that it is advisable for him to embrace the first fair wind, and good opportunity to proceed on a Cruise: To use his best discretion as to the manner of his proceeding, and to the time for his return – I apprehend he will govern himself by this, and hope the measure may meet your approbation –

CONTINENTAL MARINE COMMITTEE TO COMMODORE ESEK HOPKINS [1]

The Marine Committee

Sir Philadelphia August 22nd 1776.

As you are now about to return to Rhode Island where we Understand the Alfred and Cabbot remain inactive.

—We think proper you should exert your Utmost endeavours in Conjunction with the Commanders of those Vessels to get them equipped and Manned with all possible expedition, for A six Months Cruize. –

We think A Most important Service may be performed by the Alfred, Columbus, Cabbot and Hampden by dispatching them for NewfoundLand with orders to destroy the British Fishery there; they must make Prize of every British ship or Vessel they meet with – they must seize and destroy their Fishing Boats and stages and make Prisoners of their fisher Men, or such of them, as will not freely enter into our service, and as it is highly probable they may take more Prizes than they can conveniently spare Men to bring into Port, it may be proper in such case to destroy them. The season is now come when the NewfoundLand Men begin to load their Fish Cargoes, consequently no time must be lost, and if the Columbus is not in Port when you reach Rhode Island, you'l dispatch the Alfred, Cabbot and Hampden immediately appointing Such place of Rendevouz and such Signals as will enable them to Meet again in case of Seperation, and also enable the Columbus to follow and join them, and whenever she returns from her present Cruize, you Must order her on this service giving the Commander of her A Copy of the instructions, Signals &c. We doubt not there are Some British ships of War on the NewfoundLand station to protect their Fishery and of course our commanders must act with Such caution as to avoid being taken themselves, but we hope this will not prevent a Spirited and resolute conduct in the execution of their expidition, which we flatter ourselves will in the event prove highly detrimental to our enemies – honourable and beneficial to the United States of America. – These being the Objects we have in View we desire that your Orders to the Commanders May be adapted in the best manner your knowledge and experience can devise to obtain the end proposed.

When this small Squadron have done the enemy as Much Mischief as they can in that quarter they Must proceed into the Gulph of St Lawrence and there take Cruizing ground as may be Most likely to intercept the supplies of Indian Goods and other stores that we suppose will be sent from England for Canada when they know that our Troops have evacuated that Country. There is another object well worthy of their Attention but we fear the acquisition of it is too uncertain to found A Cruize upon, we Mean the Capture of the Hudsons Bay Ships which in their return must be very Valueable; if the Captains should be of oppinion that by dividing their force they can accomplish both these services, we would submit that Point to your and their determination. We have no doubt but they will take valuable prizes in the Gulph of St. Lawrence if the Cruising ground is well chosen, and they Must Send their Prizes for Such of our Ports as they will be Most likely to reach with safety. We deliver you herewith Some of the Marine Books, List of Continental Agents in every state, and Several of the Printed declarations of Independence. they May do well to notify the inhabitants of the French Islands of St Pierrs & Miquelon of this declaration and sound how the inhabitents stand affected toward us, assuring them the French Government favour Our Cause and will probably become our Alley by treaty. Perhaps our Ships may find shelter and protection in these Islands if the enemy have Ships in that quarter too Strong for us. Should this Fleet take any prizes whose Cargoes might be particularly usefull to the inhabitents of these States, they may do well to convoy Such into Port, and if they gain any intelligence that the Commanders think important they Must dispatch one of the small Vessells with the Account to us – putting into the first Port and Sending an express with it to the General or to us. You will instruct the commander of each Vessel to write us by all Opportunities, of their proceedings and of the Occurrences they Meet with, they Must make us Monthly Returns of their Crews, of the Supplies made to them, of the provisions, and make Copies of their Log Books and Journals to be transmitted to us at their Return.

They Must be carefull of their Ships, stores and materials, use their Officers and Men in Such a Manner as will recommend the service and at the same time preserve strict discipline. They will no doubt from principles of humanity and generosity treat their Prisoners with all the kindness and Attention their Respective Situations and circumstances will admit of and we hope their conduct will in all things be such as to Merit the continuance of our Confidence. –

You will direct the commanders of each Vessel to be very exact in keeping a List of all Persons on board that are intitled to Prize Money Mentioning their Names, stations, & Shares, Copys of which they Must furnish the Agent or Agents that receive the Prizes in Order that just & equitable distribution of Prize Money May in due time be Made. –

We also wish to have a full and just valuation of all the Cannon, stores &c which you brought from Providence that have been appropriated to public Use or that remain for that Purpose, and we desire you would have the vessels you took and the property in them Libelled and tryed in order that

Such part as is condemned may be sold – the Accounts Settled and distribution of the Prize Money made. We are sir [&c.]

P.S. We deliver you herewith A Letter to Nathaniel Shaw junr Esqr of New London directing him to purchase the Armed Schooner You took in Your late Cruize [2] This Schooner Must be called the Hopkins and immediately fitted out as A Continental Cruizer and You are to add her to the Fleet destined against Newfound Land Fishery sending her Away in Company with the Alfred &c – We deliver you here with a blank Commission for the Captain and we choose the Offer of it should be Made to Captain [Samuel] Chew of New Haven he being Strongly recommended by the Committee of that place but if he refuses this appointment we hereby authorize you to put in a proper commander and fill this Commission with his Name. We also deliver you Some blank Warrants which you will fill up with Proper Persons for the Master and other inferior Officers for that Schooner.

Let it be an article of your instructions to all the Captains to be particularly carefull to Send all salt they May take to Some of these States as we expect it will be very Much Wanted. Should you think it adviseable to go upon the expedition to Newfound Land &c Yourself You May do therein as you judge will be Most Serviceable to the continent and hoist your Broad Pendant on board any of the Vessels you choose. –

I wrote you the 1st Inst Copy of which goes by this Opportunity. –

Mr. [James] Le Maitre has at length arrived here, but as I apprehended, by way of Hallifax & without the Sloop. – On the Night of the 5th of June near the Island of Bermuda, the Crew, instigated & headed by the Mate (who it seems was a Caledonian) fell upon Capt [William] Britton & him whilst in their Beds and threatning the least resistance with immediate Death, made them both prisoners, at the same Instant Breaking open their Chests & seizing upon all their papers, which the Hurry & unexpectedness of the Assault gave them no time to destroy. Having thus far accomplished their villainous design, they took the Management of the Vessell upon themselves & shaped a course to the N Eastward, intending as the mate has since acknowledged, for some port of Great Britain, with hopes, no doubt, of being generously rewarded for their Treachery. But falling in with an armed Transport, a little to the Eastward of the Banks they were taken & conducted back to Hallifax, & there delivered with the papers &ca. to the Governor [2] Le Maitre says he is ignorant of the Contents of the Letters but supposes they contained some matters of Consequence as the Governor appeared much vexed when he read them & treated him in a very scurvy manner, suffering him to be despoiled of all he had, even his wearing Apparel, Shoe Buckles, &ca.

This is the third Instance of the kind that has come within my Knowledge, and I am really afraid they will happen more frequently unless you are exceedingly cautious at least in the Appointment of your Officers. – The Congress I think could scarce devise a punishment adequate to such perfidy.

Mr Le Maitre informs that Admiral Howe arrived with his Squadron at Hallifax about the 26th of June, but as the General his Brother had left that place with his Army a few days before, he without making any stay, proceeded to Long Island, which it seems is now the place of rendezvous. – According to the best Accounts he could obtain, the Ministerial Army there consist'd of 20,000 Men, 12,000 of whom are, or I would rather say, were Hessians, & 3000 Highlanders, the residue being the Remains of the Boston Army. He adds that [John] Burgoyne was at the Head of 9000 Troops in Canada, & that they were daily looking out at Hallifax for 6000 Hanoverians & a further reinforcement of Highlanders – And it is reported here that there is a Negociation on foot between England & Russia for 13,000 Russians, wch are to be sent also to America. – They are formidable Stories, & by no means incredible, for you must be convinced long before this that no Expence, no Means, no Art will be unessayed to crush & utterly ruin you.

These things I doubt not you'le have heard long ago, at least such of them as are passing in your Neighbourhood, and you must ascribe my troubling you with a repetition of them to the Anxiety where with I am continually agitated for the Success & prosperity of the Cause. I am Sir [&c.]

Dear General Ty[c]onderoga 23d August 1776: –

This will be deliver'd to you by Doctor [Stephen] McCrea, whom at the Recommendation of Doctor [Jonathan] Potts, I have appointed First Surgeon to the Fleet under your Command. he has Instruments, & Medicines, two things much in request with you. Mr Francis Hagan accompanys Mr M'Crea, as his Assistant Surgeon. I cannot procure any Instruments for him here, but wish you could hire Doctor Speram's for the Voyage. You are I am told acquainted with Doctor M'Crea. I am assured his Abillities are their Own Recommendation. – Another Gondola sails from hence this morning, & the Row Galley will Sail tomorrow. Yesterday Mr Titcomb, Mas[te]r Carpenter from Skeensborough return'd thither from hence he got a good Recruit of Ship Carpenters Twelve of his Gang being now Sick: he is a fine looking Fellow and seems desirous to Command The Row Galley he has just finish'd, he professes himself a Seaman, from the Sense, & Manly appearance of Mr Titcomb, I think you would do well to appoint him, but I shall not interfere further than to recommend him – I wrote yesterday to General [David] Waterbury, to Spur him up to reinforce you with all Speed with the Row Galleys. I am confident he will exert himself to Join you as expeditiously as possible. – The Rumour we heard of an Action at New York, proves premature. the Enemy had Embarqu'd from Staten Island, but not Landed again when the last Accounts came from thence – it is positively asserted that The Hessian General had sent to Genl Washington, to know what Treatment the Prisoners of that Principality were to Expect, & was Answerd that they must Expect to be treated as Hirelings – may Health Honour & Success attend You – I am Dear General [&c.]

Horatio Gates

Capt [John] Thatcher of Col: [Heman] Swifts Regt is Just come from Govr Trumbulls where I sent him Express he says You had consented to his Commanding a Row Galley. he seems very fit to do it –

BRIGADIER GENERAL BENEDICT ARNOLD TO MAJOR GENERAL HORATIO GATES[1]

[Extract] Crown Point Augt 23d 1776

Dear General I have this minute received yours by Docr [Stephen] McCrea, & am very happy at his arival as I was determined to have Sailed the first fair wind even without a Surgeon, I believe him to be a very good, One. I have borrowed Dr Sparhams Instrum[en]ts. I am glad to hear the Gondalo, & Gally is like to Join me so soon. – I have not the least objection to Captain Titcomb's commanding One of the Gallies I think he had better take the Second he is building as takeing him from his gang before she is finished will retard the business. – I believe Capt. Theatcher a very good Officer & could wish he might take the Command of one of the Gallies which is done . . .

[Extract] New York, August 23, 1776.

Sir: I beg leave to inform Congress that Yesterday Morning and in the course of the preceding night, a considerable body of the Enemy, amounting by report to eight or nine thousand, and these all British, Landed from the Transport Ships mentioned in my last at Gravesend Bay on Long Island, and have approached within three miles of our Lines, having marched across the Low, cleared Grounds, near the Woods at Flat Bush where they are halted, from my last Intelligence. . . .

By Wednesday Evening's Post I received a Letter from General Ward, inclosing a Copy of the Invoice of Ordinance Stores taken by Captain Manly with the Appraisement of the same, made in pursuance of my direction founded on the Order of Congress, which I do myself the honor of transmitting. [2]

Captain Thomas Cregier to Thomas Randall [1]

Sir Cranberry Inlet, August 23d, 1776.

I received your favour about four weeks since by the hand of Doctor Boyd, wherein I found you advised me to join Capt. [William] Rogers, but understanding Rogers was gone to the Sound in order to refit, and what more induced me to keep to the southward, was my having expectation of meeting with some of the fleets, who I much expected this way, but have been deprived of that satisfaction. There appeared six sail one day, and seven sail the other day, but they are all large ships under strong convoys, so there was no doing any thing with them, and every day frigates cruising along this coast. Three days ago, fell in with a ship and sloop tender, about ten guns, the frigate being about a mile and a half from the sloop, and was determined to give the sloop battle, but could not bring her to battle. I have been assisting in bringing in this and Egg Harbour Inlet, 2 prizes taken from the West Indies by 2 different privateers; one of those prizes I had much trouble with, and, in short, was three days at work getting the other into port, which lay aground on the bar of Egg Harbour, a ship of three hundred tons, laden with sugar, rum and molasses, bound to Bristol.

I am too well informed that your city is invaded by pirates and ruffians, which I hope in God to hear a good account of them, and that very shortly. My provisions grow short, and in a little time shall want a new supply, unless I fall in with some of the enemy's store vessels; but as for that I can not promise myself, but will discharge my duty in the search of them; and as for being supplied by the way of Long island, I believe there is no prospect, as I do imagine the troops intend landing on the said island. My bread is but very indifferent, and does not keep good, although it is aired every fortnight, yet it moulds fast, and believe it never was made of sound flour. You know I laid in only four months' provisions, and you may judge how long what remains will serve me; my people begin to want many articles, and I would be glad if you will send me some cash, as I may furnish them with a little. I have advanced of my own cash to the officers and men, thirty-nine pounds. The custom out of Philadelphia, is to advance half of their wages monthly, and beg you will send me whatever you think proper, and charge the same to me. I beg your advice in every respect, and any instruction given me, shall gladly comply with it. Myself, officers and men, are willing at any time to march to your assistance, on the shortest notice, and am willing to sacrifice both life and every thing to serve my country. Whatever instruction you may have, let me have it by the bearer, my chief lieutenant. I remain with due respect, &c

Continental Marine Committee to Lieutenant John Baldwin [1]

Sir [Philadelphia] August 23d 1776

The Continental Schooner Wasp under your command being now thoroughly repaired, well fitted equipped and manned you are immediately to proceed in said Schooner on a Cruize against the enemies of these States. We deliver you herewith a Marine Book by which you will know who are our enemies and also how to conduct yourself in conformity to the Continental Rules and Regulations you have likewise a List of the Agents in the several States to some of whom you must address the Prizes you take.

We deliver you herewith a Letter for a Gentleman in Bermuda which is of much consequence to America. You are therefore to proceed with the utmost expedition to Port Ellis at the Eastend of that Island and deliver the said Letter as quickly as possible, receive from him any others he may send in return, and as you will then be near the best Cruizing ground for West India Ships you may make a Cruize about that Lattitude for such length of Time as your Provisions will enable you to keep the Sea, unless success should tempt you to return much sooner with a good Prize. You must be careful of the schooner her Stores and Materials. Use your people well but preserve strict discipline, treat prisoners if any you make, with humanity and in all things be duely attentive to the honor and interest of America, if you can get any Seamen at Bermuda Ship as many as you can accommodate and bring us the best account you can obtain of the State and condition of that Island, with respect to Provisions, Numbers of Inhabitants what Canon arms &c they have there and enquire particularly after any british men of war, that have been there, that are there, or that are expected.

Should you be unfortunately taken either going to or after you leave Bermuda be sure to destroy all Letters you may have for or from that Island Should you gain any intelligence you may think important you must quit all other pursuits to inform us thereof soon as possible. Wishing you success We are Sir [&c.]

I am sertain, was I to Continue in the fleet (w'ch I make, no doubt, your Hon'ble board w'd appoint me to some Command,) it w'd be disagreeable to some of the Gentlemen, and for the sake of any more disturbance, I beg leave of your Hon'ble body to request of my Resignation. [2] I am not, upon no acco't whatever, going to Sea in any Private property, but in the service of the Continent, w'ch I think is respectfuller for a man that follow'd the sea, and more service to my Country, than to Continue in River Service. "At Windsor, 40 Miles from Halifax, Nova Scotia, Aug. 24, 1776" [1]

Declaration of James Young, First Mate, and John M'Kurdy, Second Mate of the Anne Transport, on board of which were 100 Men of the 72d Regiment

That on the 8th of June, they were taken near Cape Ann by four privateers, and carried into Marblehead; that they privately bought a boat and made their escape to Annapolis Royal about a fortnight ago.

That the rebels have four forts, at or near Marblehead, but keep a guard only in one of them, where there are thirty pieces of cannon, two of which are forty-two pounders, which they brought from Boston; the trunions being broke off, they have fixed them in wooden stocks, and mounted them on carriages.

That there are two large ships at Newburyport, rigged, but no guns or men: [2] A brig of fourteen guns at Salem, and one at Portsmouth, ready for sea.

That the Dispatch Schooner, of five guns, was carried into Salem the latter end of last month, by a sloop of 14 guns. The Captain, [John] Goodridge, and his brother, the mate, killed. The master lost his arm, and five out of eight seamen killed. [3] That the surgeon, a Mr. Charley, is at Marblehead.

That eight ships from the West Indies have been taken.

That they are fitting out one of them, which was a Spanish frigate, to carry 20 guns.

That a ship belonging to one Reid, [James] Kennedy, master, that sailed from Halifax with Gen. Howe, is taken. That Mr. Benjamin Davis, and several others were passengers, and that they treated Mr. Davis very ill.[4] That they do not give the prisoners sufficient provisions, but offer them good wages to enter on board their privateers, and that many do enter.

That the rebels had, for some time, a flag flying in Nantasket-road, to decoy vessels in, and that as their men were coming out of Marblehead, they saw a large ship going in, which they took to be a transport.

That the congress have promised the masters of the prizes, that they shall have leave to go away the 11th of September.

That the people in the country were in great distress for want of provisions, much discontented, and say, they do not like this sort of liberty.

That there are very few in arms at Boston, and only a few artillery at Castle William.

Colonel Joseph Reed to Governor Jonathan Trumbull [1]

Sir There can be no doubt that before this reaches you you will have heard that the Enemy have landed a considerable body of men on Long Island within 7 miles of our Lines. We cannot yet determine whether the main body of the Army is landed with a view to make a general attack on that side, or whether it is a large detachment sent to draw off our attention from this place while they proceed up with their Fleet and principal Force – The success has been various in the little skirmishes we have had, but our Troops have generally drove them back.

Before his Excellency rode out this morning he directed me to acquaint you with our Situation, and to submit to your consideration, whether it would be possible to transport a body of men (say 1000) to Long Island below the Enemy with a view to divide their Force and make a diversion – His Excellency is not insensible that a great part of the Western Militia are now in this Camp, but he supposes it might be possible that the Eastern Militia might be employed in such a service. I should illy express the General's intention, if what I have said should be construed into an order or even a request, unless in your own judgement & those with whom you think proper to consult, it should stand fully approved: nor will our operations be governed in the least by a dependence on such a measure. But at the same time the great advantages arising from it are so extremely obvious that I need not enlarge upon them.

I have the honor to present you with the Genls respect and to assure you that I am [&c.]

The Milford Frigate of 28 Guns came to our Bay yesterday, the last evening a Ship tis said very narrowly escap'd falling into her hands, she (the ship) put into Marblehead with all sail, had she had two miles further to have gone, she must have been inevitably lost as the Milford was just at her Stern; this morng. we heard a very heavy firing of[f] in the Bay since which we have an accot of the Frigate's having takeng a Schooner from which she took all the hands & then Burnt her – 'tis said the Council has sent an expresses to Newbury & to the other seaports where there are Con-

[Extract] Philadelphia August 25. 1776

We are now approaching rapidly to the autumnal Æquinox, and no great Blow has yet been struck, in the martial Way, by our Enemies nor by Us. If We should be blessed this Year, with a few Storms as happy as those which fell out last Year, in the Beginning of September, they will do much for Us. The British Fleet, where they now lie, have not an Harbour, so convenient, or safe, as they had last Year. Another Winter will do much for Us too. We shall have more and better Soldiers. We shall be better armed. We shall have a greater Force at Sea. We shall have more Trade. Our Artillery will be greatly increased, our Officers will have more Experience, and our Soldiers more Discipline – our Politicians more Courage and Confidence, and our Enemies less Hopes. Our American Commonwealths will be all compleatly form'd and organized, and every Thing, I hope, will go on, with greater Vigour.

JOSHUA WENTWORTH TO GEORGE WASHINGTON [1]

Sir, Portsmouth Augst. 26, 1776

I have the pleasure to advise the arrival at this Port a Prize Ship named the Nelly Frigate (Lyonel Bradstreet Mastr) from the Bay of Honduras for

London, Lading with a Cargo of 120,000 feet Mahogany Logs, and Thirty Tons ship't & un[illegible] Logwood, sent in by the Hancock Capt Tucker & the Franklyn Capt Skimmer, in the service of the United Colonies. The Vessel & Cargo the property of Inhabitants of Great Brittian, I have Libled her & shall persue to Trial &ca

The Trial on the recapture of the Brig. Elizabeth, taken by Comr Manly & others in the service of the Continent & bound for Halifax, ended the 22d Inst The Jury acquited her & Cargo, which appearing so directly Contarary to the Resolves of Congress & the Law of this Colony; That I conceiv'd it my Duty to appeal; in Justice to the Continent & Captors, which I hope Your Excellency will approbate. Part of the Claimants (notwithstanding the verdict is in their favor) are desireous of compromiseing with the Captors, and offer them their full Quota, of Salvage Which is, the one third of half the Value of Vessel & Cargo, we havg establish'd that the Enemy were [in] Possession more than ninty six hours, but the flagrant error in the Jury, forbid my conceedg to any compromise, for the Captors, as in that Case I must have surrender'd the Just Claim of the Continents, added to which there was taken with said Brigt a Mr [William] Jackson, a Mr [Edward] Keighley & Mr [Richard] Newton passengers with their Effects, & those Effects are Intended, as the resolves of Congress express to supply the enemy, & become forfited yet th[ey] were releas'd with the rest of the Cargo – Each claim is seperate, shou'd Your Excellency recommend my compromisg with those Claimants who are Esteem'd friendly, I shall Comport with it, but as your last favor desired my persuing the line of Duty pointed out by the Laws of the Continent I shall steedily attend toe them, until otherways directed – From a Principle of Humanity I cou'd wish the suffering Claimants cou'd be releived, but I think it out of the line of my Duty to help them – In a few days I shall forward the appeal to the Secretary of Congress and fully advise him thereon, and shou'd he think it necessary Shall attend the Trial at Philadelphia or elswhere that may be appointed

The Nelly Frigate is a Ship of 305 Tons mounts 2 three pounders & 4 Two pounders.

Petition of William Pringle to the Massachusetts Council [1]

The Petition of William Pringle late Commander of Ship Anna Maria. — Humbly Sheweth

That on the 5th July last, your Petitioner, in the Ship Anna Maria, of which he was Master, bound from Barbadoes to London, was taken by the Private Sloop of War, called the Revenge, Commanded by Capt Joseph White, and about the 18th of said Month brought into Salem. —

That your Petitioner, having a Family in England, must make it very distressing, both to him and them to be destained in this Country. —

That your Petitioner before he left Barbadoes, had bought and forwarded home, Bills of Exchange to a very considerable amount; which Bills were drawn on the strength and Credit of the Sugars on board the said Ship Anna Maria; which Bills will now of course be protested, and if your Petitioner should not get home soon, so as to obtain Security for the payment of them, he may probably entirely lose the Money.

That your Petitioner being detained here, will be very detrimental to his affairs on many other Accounts: and his extream anxiety of mind, which he must necessarily be under, arising from his being separated from his Family and Friends, and in a Country where he is an entire Stranger (tho' treated with great kindness and humanity) he apprehends will greatly injure and impair his health. —

Your Petitioner's humble Prayer therefore is that the Honorable Board would be pleased to permit him to take passage for England in the Ship Creighton, lately purchased at Boston [2] by Capt William Ross, who was Passenger on board and taken in the Ship Zachary Bayley. — your Petitioner further prays that Mr George Delano, a young Gentlemen who is a near Relation to the principal Owner of the said Ship Anna Maria, and took the Voyage for his health, together with his Servant, may also have leave to take passage with your Petitioner, in the said Ship Creighton. —

And your Petitioner as in duty bound shall ever pray

Sir – Poughkeepsie, Aug. 26th, 1776.

Capt. Hazlewood [Hazelwood], who came up to us by request of Convention, has fitted a fine vessel, as we conceive in a masterly manner, and given such instructions to some persons we have here employed, with respect to mixing fire combustibles, &c. that we think we can now carry on our works without further assistance. He has in general been very assiduous, and of very much use to us. We are unhappy at this time not to have a quorum of our committee present, therefore must beg leave to submit to your Honourable House, the consideration of any reward this gentleman may have reason to expect from this State, for his extraordinary expense and trouble in this business. We are, with respect [&c.]

GEORGE WASHINGTON TO MAJOR GENERAL ARTEMAS WARD [1]

Head Quarters, New York, August 26, 1776.

Sir: I am now to Acknowledge the Receipt of your's of the 15th. and 19th. Instant and am much obliged for your care and dispatch in forwarding the Two Sea Morters which I wish may come safe to hand. The number and strength of the Enemy and the many different posts we have to occupy together with the late Manouevres of General Howe render it utterly impossible for me to relieve you by sending a General Officer from this to take Command in Boston, Congress seeing the Situation pass'd the enclosed Resolve, [2] and I cannot but hope you will conclude to keep the Command till something decisive is done with our formidable Enemy in this Quarter, who have landed most of their Army on Long Island and advanced part of them as far as Flatt Bush within three Miles of our Works; between them and the Works is a Ridge of Hills covered wt. Woods in which I have posted a large Body of the Army, which have once repulsed an advanced party of them in an attempt to get through and I cannot but hope will prevent or at least weaken them much should they effect their purpose of passing. I am, etc.

We hear Orders are already arrived in the West Indies from England, from Admiral [James] Young to seize and cut out all the American Vessels that may be found in any foreign Ports.

The Pomona Frigate has taken and carried into St. Kitts, a Dutch ship going from St. Eustatia, 'tis said, to Amsterdam, loaded with Sugars, but we hear she had Powder on board, and was bound to America. The Vessel is said to be the Property of Mr. D'Graff, of St. Eustatia.

We hear that for the future English Men of War will not be permitted to enter the Road of St. Eustatia.

Dr Sir [Eagle off Staten Island, August 26]

I have just received a letter from the General which will make it necessary for me to appoint some movements with the ships here towards the Town, to countenance the intended operations of the Army this night & to morrow morning. Your ship will be useful on that occasion, and your presence always desirable. If therefore your stay is not immediately necessary where you are, the service in Gravesend Bay will be very consistently left with Capt Parker, who may order all assistance he has need of from Cap. [William] Williams in the Experiment during your absence. Sr Geo: Collier if his ship is not necessary, in her present station maybe advanced as high as we lye, but on the Eastern shore to cover the march of the troops along this Coast. He will be then in the way to receive occasional orders. I am obliged to go immediately to Gen [James] Grant's head Quarters at DeNuseys House [2] to clear up a passage in Gen: Howe's letter, if this arrives in time for you to meet me there we can talk upon the intended Movement of the Ships &c But time pressing, my Way there will be short. No 3. Private
My Lord I have on every occasion represented to the Generals and Admirals, the Situation of the Province, repecting military and maritime Affairs.

I requested, My Lord, a naval assistance from every Admiral.

As yet we have not had any permanent.

Captain [Thomas] Bishop of the Lively Frigate, did not go into Saint Maries, as I desired.

I am informed by people from Amelia if he had entered the River with the Sloop letter of Mark – Osbourn, he would have destroyed all the rebel Craft: but. my Lord, he sailed for New York, and sent Osbourn with my dispatches to the Commanding Officer at Cockspur, a Copy of which; I beg leave to enclose to your Lordship. No 1. & 2. [2]

The retreat from Saint Maries I am in hourly apprehensions, may be attended with very bad effects on Saint John River.

These reasons, my Lord, have determined me to take the Sloop Captain Mowbray, into the Government service on the best terms I can make, and shall order her for the Service in Saint John River. . . .

"Extract of a Letter from an Officer on Board the Pomona Sloop of War, dated Barbadoes, August 26, 1776." [1]

Our Admiral has ordered our station off the Virgin Isles, where we have been very lucky, taking one or more prizes every week. Yesterday we arrived here with one, she was laden with cotton, silks, &c. and had on board besides 20 tons of saltpetre; we saw her about four A.M. and about two P.M. was along-side of her. We hailed her, but she gave us no answer, but laying her topsails aback, hawled up her ports, and gave us a broadside, when she filled her sails, and would have stood from us; but we gave her a handsome peppering before she struck; having raked her twice. When we went on board, the Captain would hardly answer any questions put to him, but we found by the ship's papers that his name was Theobald Dibnal, part owner of the vessel, which was called the Palm-Tree, and consigned to Philip Handle, merchant, at Savannah, in Georgia. We lost five men killed, and ten wounded, and the American ten killed and 15 wounded.

Our fleet, consisting of 3 schooners, 1 large sloop, 4 gondolas, and 4 galleys, now lie in Lake Champlaine, near Crown Point and expect to sail in 3 days, and lay in a narrow passage of the lake, to prevent the enemy from passing. We have information that the enemy are on their way to this place from St. John's, they have no other craft than battoes; if they come, I trust we shall give them a warm reception, as our fleet is well fitted and manned – We have now at Ticonderoga about 3500 effective men, and more coming in daily: The fort and every height and point about it is well fortified. – Besides we have the command of the lakes.

MEMORIAL OF COMMODORE JACOBUS WYNKOOP [1]

To the Honorable the United States of America in Congress assembled –

The Memorial of Jacobus Wynkoop

Sheweth –

That your Memorialist has been employed, and served in the continental Service, and in the service of the United States of America, from the 28th Day of June 1775, until the 18th Day of August Instant –

That your Memorialist by his first appointment, was a Captain of the 8th Company and 4th Regt of continental forces raised in the Province of New York.

That his Honor M Genl Schuyler, Commander in Chief in the Northern Department, did sometime after the appointment of your Memorialist to the Captaincy aforesaid, offer to your memorialist the Command of the Vessels on Lake Champlain, and signified to your memorialist, that his honor would recommend your Memorialist to the Honorable the Continental Congress as a person fit for the said Station.

That your Memorialist being at Fort George, did in the month of January in the present year receive a Letter from his Honor M. Genl Schuyler, informing Your Memorialist that his Honor expected momently to hear from Congress, on the Subject of his appointment –

That in the month of April last Your Memorialist, at the City of New York, did receive from the Honorable the Provincial Congress, for the Province of New York, a certified copy of a Letter, written by his Honor M Genl: Schuyler, to the President of the said Provincial Congress, which is in the words following

Sir Albany March 8th 1776

I am Honored with yours of the 4th Inst – The Continental Congress have resolved, that Capt Wynkoop should be employed upon the Lakes, under Commodore Douglass. Whether the latter Gentleman means to engage in that service, I do not know – Of this Congress can very speedily inform itself, as he resides near New York; Should he not engage, there is no person I would more willingly have to command the Vessels than Capt Wynkoop. At any rate, I wish You to send him up the soonest possible, with a sufficient number of Sailors for the two Schooners and Sloop – I am Sir [&c.]

Ph. Schuyler

To Nathaniel Woodhull Esqr.

The foregoing is a true copy of the Original examined and compared by Robt Benson

Your Memorialist received, at the same time, an extract from the minutes of the Committee of Safety for N York aforesaid; A Copy of which follows –

In Committee of Safety – New York April the thirteenth 1776

Ordered that Captain Jacobus Wynkoop do inlist the number of mariners desired by M Genl Schuyler, for the Service at the Lakes, with all possible dispatch; That Capt: Wynkoop proceed to Albany with the said Mariners, to Genl Schuyler, and take his directions as to the Vessels on the Lakes until the Honorable the Continental Congress shall have appointed him to that Command, or some other Gentleman shall arrive at the Lakes authorized to take the Command.

Extract from the Minutes
John McKesson Secy

That in Consequence of the aforesaid Letter and Order, your Memorialist, immediately inlisted a number of Sailors and proceeded up to Fort-George where he received from the Honorable M Genl Schuyler, an Order in the Words following –

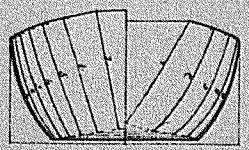
Sir Fort-George May 7th 1776

You are immediately to repair to Tyonderoga, and take the Command of all the Vessels on Lake Champlain, which You will, with the greatest expedition, put in the best condition possible, for immediate Service.

I am Sir [&c.]
Ph: Schuyler

That your memorialist expecting the appointment of Commodore of the Lakes, and not being willing to act in a subordinate capacity did agreeable to the said Order take upon him the Command of the Vessels on the Lakes aforesaid, & has since continued in that department, in the Service of the said Continental Congress, and of these United States, acting and exerting his abilities for the public advantage –

That on the 17th Day of August Inst Your Memorialist, being on his Station, was alarmed, by the Report of a Swivel from one of the Schooners under his Command, which was succeeded by a similar signal from another of the said Schooners. –



That Your Memorialist observing that the Said Schooner was making ready to get under Sail, and conceiving that they ought not to move without his immediate Orders, (unless in case of alarm when a Boat should be instantly dispatched to inform him of the Occasion) and fearing that some design had been formed by the Captain of the said Schooner, or their Crews to go over to the Enemy; by the Command of your Memorialist a Swivel was fired to bring too the said Schooners.

That upon firing of the said Swivel, they came to an Anchor again, and your memorialist ordered the mate to go in the boat, and bring the Captains on Board the Commodore Schooner; All preparations for sailing were stopped, and Capt: Premer Commander of one of the said Schooners (The other Capt being on shore) came on board the royal savage, then under your Memorialists immediate Command –

That your Memorialist then desired to know from the said Captain, for what reason those Guns were fired, and preparations made for sailing, who informed your Memorialist, that he had received from his Honor Brigadier Genl Arnold Orders to get his Schooner immediately under way and beat down the Lakes, 8 or 10 miles and if he made any discovery of the Enemy to send a boat, and acquaint him of the particulars –

That Your Memorialist not having received any Intimation of being superceded in the Command aforesaid, and conceiving that any Orders even from the Commander in chief of the Army in the Northern department, or the Commanding Officer at Lake George or Tyonderoga, respecting the Vessels on the Lakes, should be directed and first communicated to your memorialist, and be given out by him to the respective Captains under his Command, your Memorialist being also best acquainted with the State and Condition of the said Vessels, Your Memorialist did transmit to his Honor the said Brigadier General Arnold, a Letter in the words following

That your Memorialist having thus received information of the approach of the Enemy, that the Service might not suffer, by the dispute of the Officers, issued out an Order to the Captains of the said Schooners in the words following –

You will immediately get under way, and go down the Lake about 8, or ten miles – If You make any discovery of the Enemy, Send a Boat to acquaint me of the Particulars; If none of the Enemy appear, You are directly to return.

Yours Jacobus Wynkoop Comd

That immediately after your Memorialist had received the Letter aforesaid from his Honor the said Brigadier Genl Arnold His Honor the said Brigadier Genl Arnold came on board the Royal Savage, and asked your memorialist, how he dared to countermand his Orders, and acquainted your memorialist that he had power to take the command of the fleet, and shewed a paper containing writing Orders from his Honor M Genl Gates to that purport –

That your Memorialist conceiving that no Officer could be placed over him in the Naval Department, unless by appointment from the United States in Congress assembled, or the Provincial Congress for the Province of New York, except in cases of Misbehaviour, and your Memorialist being conscious of having done his duty, did acquaint the said Brigadier Genl Arnold that he would receive no Orders from him as naval Officer under his present appointment, and that all orders from the Commanders at the several posts on the Lakes ought regularly to be first communicated to your Memorialist. –

That his Honor the said Brigadier Genl Arnold, then dispatched a Letter to his Honor M Genl Gates, acquainting him with the above particulars, and on the 18th Day of Augt Inst Your Memorialist received a Letter from the said Brigadier Genl Arnold, in the words following. –

It is my Orders You immediately put Commodore Wynkoop in Arrest – and send him Prisoner to Head Quarters at Tyonderoga

Sign'd Horatio Gates

In Compliance of the above Order, I do hereby put you in Arrest, of which You will take notice and govern yourself accordingly – A Boat and Hands shall be ordered this Evening or to morrow morning to attend You to Tyonderoga – Please to let me know what time will be most agreeable. –

I am Sir [&c.]
B:Arnold: B:Genl

That agreable to the above order Your memorialist immediately repaired to Tyonderoga and was ordered from thence by his Honor M Genl Gates, to the Honorable M Gen Philip Schuyler at Albany and was informed by his Honor the said M Genl Gates that he had sent his Crime forward. –

That your Memorialist humbly conceives that if he had suffered the said Schooners to go off unmolested, and design of the Captains or Crews of the said Schooners had been to go over to the Enemy, and such decision carried into execution – that your memorialist would not have been suffered to escape with impunity, and that therefore it was his duty when signals and preparations were made by them for sailing, to know their destination and issue out the Necessary Orders.

Your Memorialist therefore humbly Requests these United States, in Congress assembled; to take this Memorial into their wise Consideration and grant him such Relief as he is in Justice entitled to –

JOURNAL OF THE NEW YORK COMMITTEE OF SAFETY [1]

Tuesday Morning,
[Harlem] August 27th, 1776.

Major Lockwood informed the Committee that the enemy's ships are at White Stone. Thereupon, Resolved and Ordered, That Mr. Hobart and Mr. R. R. Livingston, be a committee to wait on His Excellency General Washington, and confer with him relative to the state of Nassau island, and what measures may be necessary for distressing the enemy thereon, or defending or removing the inhabitants, and that they report the results of their deliberations thereon to this Committee, or the Convention of this State.

Ordered, That Capt. [Anthony] Rutgers be requested immediately to proceed to the city of New-York, and afford all possible aid, attention, direction and assistance in stopping, or impeding the navigation of the East river, and that he employ all such persons as he shall think proper, to give him aid.

An express arrived from New-London and communicated a copy of a letter from Erastus Wolcott to the committee of Say Brook, and is in the words following:

New London, August 24th, 1776.

Gentlemen – Yesterday in the morning, appeared at the east end of Fisher's island, two of the enemy's armed frigates and a brig, and this morning they passed by this harbour, standing to the westward. I thought it best to give you this intelligence by express, that you may keep a good look out, and take what measures your prudence will suggest, and must leave it to you whether or not to forward this from town to town by express, (if no direct opportunity offers); this may much depend on what is already known of their being in the Sound, and by observing their motions.

I am, gentlemen, With esteem and regard, [&c.]

Erastus Wolcott.

To the Committee of Say Brook.

Ordered, That a copy of the letter from Erastus Wolcott, dated New-London, Augt. 24, 1776, be immediately transmitted by express to Brigadier-General [Nathaniel] Woodhull, and that he be requested to cause all the stock on the seacoast of Long island, which are most exposed to the enemy's depredations, to be drove with all possible despatch so far into the interior part of the country as to be out of danger from the enemy.

Memoirs of Major General William Heath [1]

New York, August 27th. – Early in the morning, two ships and a brig came to anchor a little above Throg's Point.[2] Our General immediately detached Col. [Morris] Graham with his regiment, to prevent their landing to plunder or burn. Before he arrived, several barges full of men landed on New City Island, and killed a number of cattle. Two companies of the regiment, immediately on their arrival, ferried over to the island. The enemy carried off one man and 14 cattle – the remainder of the cattle were secured.

On the same day, there was a most bloody battle on Long Island, between the Americans and the British. The British, by a long circuitous march in the night of the 26th, with a part of their army, found the left of the Americans not so well secured as it ought to have been; and they had an opportunity to reach ground which gave them great advantage, while it equally exposed the Americans in the strong grounds towards Flatbush. There was here also another circumstance of ground which now proved disadvantageous to the Americans. There was a considerable marsh, into which a creek ran, and on which there was a mill, known by the name of M'Gowen's. At the mill there was a passway over; but unluckily, when some of the Americans had retreated by this mill, (for they were soon routed by the British, who formed an attack almost in a semi-circle) it was set on fire. This would have been a politic step, had all the Americans on the other side, in that quarter, previously passed; but those still beyond the creek were now driven to almost desperate circumstances; they could not pass at the head of the creek; for the British column, which made the circuitous movement, were in possession of the ground on the left; consequently, many were here killed or taken prisoners, and numbers perishing in attempting to get over the creek, some of them sticking in the mud. Those who escaped retreated to the American works. The British sustained a considerable loss in killed and wounded, and a subaltern and 23 men were taken prisoners; but the American loss was far greater in killed, wounded, and prisoners. Among the latter were Gen. Sullivan and Lord Sterling. Several field-pieces were also lost. At evening, the British army encamped in front of the Americans.

The Committee have come to a resolution either to purchase the Sloop or deliver her up to you as they will not any longer hire her, but as the greatest part of the materials she now has on board belong to the Public they wou'd prefer buying her at the valuation, to stripping her and when you consider that she will be a mere wreck when so stripped, and that the

[Extract] Philadelphia Aug. 27. 1776

. . . I am afraid, that Boston Harbour is not yet impregnable. – if it is not, it ought to be. – Boston has not grown into favour with King George, Lord North or General Howe. – It is no peculiar Spight against New York, which has induced the Fleet and Army, to invade it, – it is no peculiar Friendship, Favour, or Partiality to Boston, which has induced them to leave it. – Be upon your Guard. – hesitate at no Expence, no[r] Fail to fortify that Harbour against all its Enemies. – You ought to Suppose the whole British Empire to be your Enemy, and prepare your selves against its Malice, and Revenge How's Army must have winter Quarters Somewhere and will at all Hazards – They may try at Boston there they lost their Honour, there they would fain regain it if they [could] The Enemy, have a tough, hard Bone to pick at New York, according to present appearances. They are creeping on. Moments are now of Importance. – They are landed on Long Island. – If they attack our forts in Columns, they may carry them, but if We do our duty they will loose the Worth of them in Blood. – a few days will disclose more of their designs

JOURNAL OF THE PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL OF SAFETY [1]

In Council of Safety,

[Philadelphia] August 27th, 1776.

John M. Nesbitt, Esq'r, Treasurer, was directed to pay the following acco'ts, Viz't:

Capt. Joseph Blewer £23 6 0 for repairing a Shallop, damaged in Sinking the Peers at Fort Island.

Mr. John Stelwell £23 11 6, being for Expenses in saving Powder out of the Brig Nancy, paid by Capt. Wm. Pollock.

Capt. Thomas Bell £399 18 0, for Freight of 142 Barrels of Powder & 53 Tons of Lead.

The Board then adjourned to 3 o'Clock, P.M.

The Council having heard the complaints made against Commodore Samuel Davison, with the proofs brought to support them; and taking into consideration the situation of the Naval armaments belonging to this State, are of opinion, that most of the Charges made against the said Samuel Davison are frivolous, and discover a dangerous Spirit of Licentiousness amongst the other Officers, inconsistent with The Duty they owe their Country, and not to be justified on Military Principles, which exacts a due Obedience at all times to the orders of superiors; But as it appears to the Council that the Officers of the Fleet in General, have not that respect for, nor Confidence in, the said Samuel Davison, which is absolutely necessary to give Vigour and Efficacy to the Command, and that notwithstanding the Known merit of said Davison, yet the charge of Incompetency to so important a Trust is not altogether without foundation; It is therefore

Resolved, That the said Samuel Davison, Esq'r, be no longer Continued in the Command of the naval armament of this State, and he is accordingly dismissed from the same.

Resolved, That Capt. Henry Dougherty be appointed to the Command of the Galley building at Kensington, by Mr. Williams, and that she be called the Delaware.

Resolved, That Capt. John Rice be appointed to the Command of the Galley called the Convention.

Agreeable to a Resolve of the Honourable Congress, & by direction of the Board, the following Commissions for Privateers, were granted, vizt:

To John Hamilton, Commander of the Brig't General Mifflin, of 12 Carriage Guns and 90 men, owned by John Cox, John Chaloner, &ca.

To Charles Ferguson, Commander of the Brig't General Putnam, of 12 Carriage Guns and 90 men, Owned by Matthew Irwin, Benjamin Harbeson, &ca.

of Men, and them but very Indifferent Capt [John] Lambert tho't proper to let the Ship Remove before we should proceed, by persons that have been taken & releas'd we find she has but ten Carriage Guns, 18 Swivels & about 100 Men one half of them Disaffected and only wait an oppertunity of being properly Engaged to Rise on their Officers, her present Station is between Gran Mannan and Sequin, should she fall in with two of your Honors Sloops of War, I dare say they would Clear this coast of the greatest Scourge they have had since the Commencement of the present War – should I succeed in gitting a Number of Indians it would be Impossible to git them to the Westward, unless the Viper is Removed from her Station, add to that the Distress this Country must be in, as they can git no provisions from the Westward past her, and the advantage our Enemy has by supplying the English W. I. Islands with Lumber & Fish they take from us –

I would further add one or more Ships are loading at Annoplass, that the Inhabitants of Nova Scotia come to Passamaquodia for Lumber for them, and as several have been taken and afterwards Clear'd by your Honors, our armed Vessels are Intirely Discouraged from taking them and unless some stop is put to that Trade, and the Viper Removed, the Acts of the Honble Continental Congress against the English Islands being Supply'd will be frustrated, and this Extensive this new Country Intirely ruined –

Petition of Ichabod Jones to the Massachusetts General Court [1]

State of the Massachusetts Bay } To the Honorable the Council & the Honble House of Representatives of the State aforesaid assembled in General Court at Watertown Aug 28th 1776

Most humbly shews

Ichabod Jones late of Boston in the County of Suffolk That your Petitioner in May 1775 considering that the People at Machias in the eastern part of this State were of themselves unable to procure the Provisions necessary for their Subsistence & knowing that the greater part of them depended

That a great Majority of them declared they could not obtain the necessary Supplies without the Assistance of your Petitioner & desired him to continue as formerly to bring them Provisions –

That afterwards by Means of some of Machias People with the Assistance of others in the neighbouring Places the Vessels aforesd & the Person of your Petitioner were seised – that at the time of this Seisure the Inhabitants of Machias owed to your Petitioner & Compy, nearly the Sum of four thousand Pounds lawful Money which he is able & ready to prove – That your Petitioner is lately informed they have taken Possession of his Houses Mills & all his other Estate at Machias & not only of the Estate of which your Petitioner was sole Proprietor but also the Estate which belonged to himself & others in Partnership –

That your Petitioner learns from an Advertisement in the Watertown Paper of August 19th that Libels are filed against the Vessels & Cargoes abovementioned before the Judge of the Maritime Court for the eastern District in this State & that the Justice of the Captures is to be tried at the said Court to be holden at Pownalboro on the 9th of September next – [2]

As your Petitioner is confined to this Town of Northampton under large Bonds (with scanty Means of Subsistence) he is unable to attend himself or to procure any person to attend in his Behalf on so short a Notice & is greatly apprehensive that his Property therefore will be condemned altho' if allowed to attend the sd. Court with his Evidence he persuades himself the Innocence of his Conduct would fully appear –

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly prays your Honors to take the Premisses into your wise Consideration & that he may be heard thereupon & having no Doubt on a full Knowledge of his Case your Petitioner would be discharged from any further Confinement – Your Petitioner also prays that he may have Liberty to attend in Person the Tryal aforesd of his Vessels at some future Time to which the said Court shall by Order of your Honors be adjourned & that in the mean Time all proceedings touching the Vessels & Cargoes aforesd may be staid – All which is most humbly submitted And as in Duty bound shall pray

Connecticut Journal, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28, 1776

New-Haven, August 28

Last Monday passed our Harbour, standing to the Westward, two Frigates, the Nigar of 32 guns, Capt. [George] Talbot, the other is said to carry 28 guns, also a large Brig of 16 or 18 guns, [1] who had in Company two small vessels supposed to be prizes. They left the English Fleet, near New-York, last Friday se'nnight, and it is probable will remain in the Sound to interrupt our Communication with the Army at New-York.

MAJOR GENERAL HORATIO GATES TO GEORGE WASHINGTON [1]

[Extract] Tyconderoga August 28th, 1776.

As the Small-Pox is now perfectly removed from the Army, I shall in consequence of the Intelligence received of the Motions of the Enemy immediately assemble my principal Strength to maintain this Important Pass, and hope General Waterbury, in a Week at farthest will be able to come with the three Row-Gallies to Tyconderoga, and proceed the Instant they arrive and are fitted to join General Arnold upon the Lake.

MEMOIRS OF MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM HEATH [1]

[New York, August 28, 1776] On the morning of the 28th, there was a skirmish between the Americans and British which terminated rather in favour of the former. The same night, the British began to open works, at the distance of about 600 yards from the American works on the left. Gen. Washington wrote to our General to send down to the city all the boats that could be spared from Kingsbridge and Fort Washington, intimating, that he might possibly find it necessary, at night, to throw over more troops to Long Island. This order was immediately complied with, and the boats sent down, while the real intention of their use was fully understood.

[Extract] New York Augt 28, 1776.

Dear sir I wrote you soon after I came into Town of the landing of the Kings Troops upon long Island we expected an Attack upon the Town by the Shipping or an Attempt to land above the Town soon—but it seems the Enemy have collected most or all their strength upon the Island – they have been advancing towards our lines ever since they landed – & have met with little opposition from our people till Yesterday. – Reinforcements did not go on fast to the Island till Monday & yesterday. Probably our Generals suspected it only a feint – There are now a large body of Troops on the Island all the Connecticut Regs are there save the Militia – & those on the Jersey side viz [Philip Burr] Bradley's & part of [John] Durkee's & [Comfort] Sage's on Govr Island. Part of General Miflins [Thomas Mifflin's] Troops are called in from the blue Bell. The lines in the City are almost wholly manned by the Connecticut Militia. Our Alarm post is above the Town by the North River; About 1¼ or 1½ miles from our Quarters, Whither we are to repair by break of Day. Yesterday 5 or 6 Ships appeared standing up to the Town – this Caused a General Alarm – we all continued at our Alarm posts till from morning to Sunset. The Ships came up about [illegible] half way from the hook where they came to anchor towards Night – One of them saluted the Battery at Red hook with a few Guns & the Compliment was returned probably very inoffensively to both Sides. There was a Considerable Engagement on the Island Yesterday – But particulars I cannot learn with any Certainty. Our people took near 40 Prisoners – 40 or more were sent over wounded. Col. Perrin [2] of Pensylvania was killed – probably considerable Number have been killed on both sides – I fear we have a considerable number taken prisoners, but time only can assure us of the particulars – Lord Sterling is probably Missing either killed or taken. [Lt.] Col. [James] Grant of the Regulars probably killed as a Hat was found shot through with his name wrote in it. Our Troops are doubtless retreated to their Lines – & the Enemy very near. – Nothing Material has been done today as we hear – doubtless they will soon attempt to force our lines w[hich] will be bloody work. . . .

Eagle. 28 Augt [1776]

I return you many thanks, my dear sir, for your congratulations on the events of yesterday. I have the satisfaction to hear from Genl Howe, that he has every reason to be contented with the prospects before him, and in the highest degree so, with the spirit & temper of the Troops.

I should be more deficient in judgement & discretion that I will confess that I am, if I did not much covet the assistance of you, & your present captain likewise, when any effectual service is to be undertaken. At present we must wait upon the movements of the Army; But if you can contrive to have the service in Greenwich Bay carried on by Sr Geo: Collier with the assistance of Capt [William] Williams, I shall be glad to see you with the Ph[o]enix, Rose, & Greyhound also, when the last can be consistently spared, nearer to me; for any occasional service, as well as opinion in the conduct of it. Wherefore, tho' your own ship goes down to you today, consider of the plan of arrangement which it maybe necessary to give to Sr Geo: Collier for the Gravesend Bay Service with the State of His Ship in point of Water, and follow your own sentiments for the rest. I will in the mean time endeavor to provide some means to supply him with Water which I believe he wants, that no time maybe lost in fitting him for the proposed Service and that I may the sooner derive the assistance from you which no person can value more than your ever faithful servt

COMMITTEE OF ACCOMACK COUNTY, VIRGINIA, TO THE COMMITTEE OF SOMERSET COUNTY, MARYLAND [1]

Gentn/ Accomack Augt 28th 1776

The bearer hereof (Nathan Linton) has informed the Committee of this County, that some time past he in company with one other man took up a wreck at sea, and carried it into some creek in your County, that before they could strip the wreck it was retaken from them by Joseph Wailing a noted Tory who was then bound to the Kings fleet with 20 or 30 people of his own stamp, that he the said Linton insisted he was intitled to some recompense for his trouble in saving the wreck, but Wailing refused to allow him any thing, saying the boat belonged to one Goodrich in the fleet and he would keep possession of it for him. Linton then said he would make application to some officer in the fleet for satisfaction, and was procuring a boat for that purpose, but Wailing offered him a passage in his boat, which he said was to return immediately after discharging her cargo of Tories Linton accordingly made application to Capt. [Matthew] Squire, [2] who after being informed of the several circumstances above mentioned told him he might have the hull of the wreck, and five barrels of Oyl which was in the wreck, being of no use to the fleet; Linton also informs this Committee that he took up four clintcher boats drifting; three of which together with 100 Gallons of Oyl and some old Iron, he says was taken from him by Col Waters. –

This Committee has refused to do any thing in Linton's Case, untill fully informed concerning it from you, and what Character he supports as a friend to America – which we hope you will supply us with by first oppertunity; in the mean time we desire that the boats and oyl as they are perishable articles may be sold and the money arising from the sale thereof retained untill the matter can be fully heard and determined

Signed Pr Order Committee

N.B. As Linton had rather have the Boats Oyl and Iron deliver'd him than sold, we are willing the said [w]ld be delivered him if he can give you security for the delivery of those Articles in our County – J. Powell

JOHN LANGDON TO THOMAS CUSHING [1]

Dear Sir Portsmouth 29th August 1776

Your favou'r of the 25th is now before me, I am much of Opinion with you relative to Cannon, think the prices too high by one half, I've endeavoured to Contract with them for Cannon but could not, therefore intend letting it alone for the present, till seeing Colo Whipple, who I expect every moment here from Philadelphia, the price of Cannon at Providence has risen so fast, it looks like takeing the Advantage, however I may be mistaken – The affair of the Milford I most heartily wish could take place, tho' we cannot give any Assistance with our Ship without Guns from some other place those here in our Batteries (except one or two) being 32 pounders, Six and 4 do therefore think it unlikely we can assist, however I intend mentioning it to our State and if it's possible to procure Guns, no doubt shall join you What in under Heavens does our Friends at Providence mean by not letting us have those Guns which have been cast so long. As to the Cable you mention I had 90 fathom of Junk instead of one third of all the Junk that was bought in Boston as that was our Agreemt if you remember, I therefore Expect at least five Tons more of Junk from you, as am much in want of it, not one peice of Light Canvas in this part of the World. –

One Day last Week, the Viper Sloop of War, belonging to the Royal Pirate, and which has been cruising off Cape-Ann some Days, took two Sloops, from the eastward.

Last Sunday Morning safely arrived at Marblehead, a Prize Ship from Jamaica, with a Cargo of Sugars, Cotton, &c. She was chased by the Milford Frigate, who being fired upon from one of the Forts there, put out again; and on Monday took a Brig (said to be a Prize bound for Salem) [1] and a Schooner and Sloop from the Eastward, for this Port, laden with Lumber, &c. They set Fire to the two latter Vessels, and entirely destroyed them. The Brig still remains in their Possession. The People belonging to the Eastward Vessels made their Escape in their Boats, and got safe on Shore. The Milford continues cruising off our Bay.[2]

[Extract] Albany August 29th 1776

Sir Captain Wynkoop, who has been sent down to me by General Gates has this Morning delivered me the enclosed Memorial,[2] with a Request that I should transmit it to Congress – As I cannot refuse complying with his Request I have thought it incumbent on me to let it be accompanied with General Gates and General Arnold's Letter on the Subject – Altho' I believed Wynkoop to be brave and industrious and equal to the Command of what Vessels we had when I recommended him, yet I was so far from being sufficiently acquainted whether he was equal to the Command of such a Number of Vessels as we have now there, that I learnt General Arnold's Appointment with great Satisfaction and very much approved of it . . .

Our Carpenters sicken very fast. Capt Titcomb of the Massachusetts Bay had only ten at Work on the 25th out of fifty, and many of the other Companies were also down. We are however so much a Head of the Enemy in our Naval Force, that I do not apprehend they will be able to equal our Strength this Campaign notwithstanding the Indisposition of our Carpenters – I have ordered a Physician to Skenesborough to examine the sick Carpenters that such might be discharged as are not likely to be of future Service – the Expence being very high.

If the Enemy should find themselves unable to make an Attempt to penetrate into the Colonies this Campaign it is more than probable that they will assiduously employ themselves in the Course of next Winter to procure Materials for building as large Vessels as the Lake will bear in Order to get a Superiority next Campaign and altho' I am under no Apprehensions that they will ever be able to penetrate into the Colonies from the Northward as there is such a Variety of Difficulties to be surmounted before they can reach any part where they can be subsisted, yet if they should obtain a Superiority on the Lake they might in another Campaign possess themselves of Tyonderoga, and thus compleat part of their plan, by surrounding us with a Chain of Forts, and greatly harrass our Frontiers. Would it not therefore be prudent to provide every Material this Fall and Winter for the Construction of as large Vessels as any that can be borne on the Lake?

JOURNAL OF THE NEW YORK COMMITTEE OF SAFETY [1]

Thursday, A. M.
[Harlem] Augt. 29th, 1776.

A letter from Comfort Sands, Esqr. dated at New-Rochelle, yesterday, and sent by Mr. Danl. Redfield, informing the Committee that said Redfield was sent to be examined relative to the enemy's ships, and requesting the Committee to give him a permit to pass King's Bridge.

Danl. Redfield, being examined, says, that about 4 o'clock on Monday morning last, his sloop, going from New-York, was taken by the Brig Halifax, mounting 10 four pounders, Quorme [William Quarme], commander; that about 12 o'clock same day, they run his vessel, after having stripped her of the rigging, cable and anchor. The man who piloted the vessel was one Reed; the frigates were La Brun [Brune] and the Niger; that the design of the enemy was to bring over their tories from Long island; that the ships of war were to run to King's Bridge, there to land their forces, and make a juncture with the other part of the army; that the enemy by this means would be able to cut off all communication with our army both by land and water, and oblige our troops in New-York to surrender. That the enemy had plundered Hart and City island; that he thinks they got about 12 or 14 head of cattle, besides sheep, ducks, &c; that while he was on board several persons come on board from Long island; that on Tuesday a man came on board who said that the King's army had killed 1,300 of our men, and had gained the ground of our men; that one Barne came on board from the City island; that his partner, Stephen is kept on board in order to be exchanged for the mate of the Niger, who had been taken by the sloop Beverly and carried into Amboy. Says the private men were very inveterate against us; they did not use his person ill.

"MINUTES OF THE COUNCIL OF WAR ON THE EVACUATION OF LONG ISLAND" [1]

At a Council of War held at Long Island, August 29th 1776.

Present, His Excellency Gen. Washington; Major-Generals, [Israel] Putnam, [Joseph] Spencer; Brigadier Generals, [Thomas] Mifflin, [Alexander]

McDougall, [Samuel Holden] Parsons, [John Morin] Scott, [James] Wadsworth, [John] Fellows.

It was submitted to the consideration of the Council, whether under all circumstances, it would not be eligible to leave Long Island, and its dependencies, and remove the army to New York. Unanimously agreed in affirmative, for the following reasons:

1st Because our advanced party had met with a defeat, and the wood was lost, where we expected to make a principal stand.

2d The great loss sustained in the death, or the captivity of several valuable officers, and their battalions, or a large part of them, had occasioned great confusion and discouragement among the troops.

3d The heavy rains which fell two days and nights with but little intermission, had injured the arms, and spoiled a great part of the ammunition; and the soldiery being without cover, and obliged to lay in the lines, were worn out, and it was to be feared could not be retained in them in any order.

4th From the time the enemy moved from Flatbush, several large ships had attempted to get up, as supposed, into the East River, to cut off our communication, by which the whole Army would have been destroyed, but the wind being northeast, could not effect it.

5th Upon consulting with persons of knowledge of the harbour, they were of opinion that small ships might come between Long Islands and Governour's Island, where there are no obstructions, and which would cut off the communication effectually; and who were also of opinion that the [hulks] sunk between Governor's Island and the city of New York, were no sufficient security for obstructing that passage.

6th Thoug[h] our lines were fortified with strong redoubts, yet a great part of them were weak, being abbatied with brush, and affording no strong cover, so that there was reason to apprehend they might be forced, which would have put our troops in confusion, and having no retreat they must have been cut in pieces or made prisoners.

7th The divided state of our troops, render our defence very precarious, and the duty of defending long and extensive lines, at so many different places, without proper conveniences and cover, so very fatiguing, that the troops had become dispirited by their incessant duty and watching.

8th Because the enemy had sent several ships of war into the Sound to a place called Flushing Bay, and from the information received, that a part of their troops were moving across Long Island that way, there was reason to apprehend they meant to pass over land and form an encampment above Kingsbridge, in order to cut off and prevent all communication between our army and the country beyond them, or to get in our rear.

Memoirs of Major General William Heath [1]

[New York, August] 29th. – The ships on the East River fell down to Hunt's Point. On the same night, the Americans evacuated Long-Island, bringing off their military stores, provisions, &c. Some heavy cannon were left. In this retreat from the Island, and which was well conducted, an instance of discipline and of true fortitude was exhibited by the American guards and pickets. In order that the British should not get knowledge of the withdraw of the Americans, until their main body had embarked in the boats and pushed off from the shore, (which was a matter of the highest importance to their safety the guards were ordered to continue at their respective posts, with centinels alert, as if nothing extraordinary was taking place, until the troops had embarked: they were than to come off, march briskly to the ferry, and embark themselves. But somehow or other, the guards came off, and had got well toward the landing-place, when they were ordered to face about, march back, and re-occupy their former posts; which they instantly obeyed, and continued at them, until called off to cross the ferry. Whoever has seen troops in a similar situation, or duly contemplates the human heart in such trials, will know how to appreciate the conduct of these brave men, on this occasion.

Narrative of Captain Andrew Snape Hamond [1]

[H.M.S. Roebuck, August 14 to August 29]

14th Augst In New York Harbour, I found my Lord Howe, with his Flag onboard the Eagle, Lord Shuldham in the Chatham and Commodore Hotham in the Preston, with about 25 Sail of Men of War. They were laying off Staten Island, on which General Howe's Army (consisting of 24 thousand Men) were encamped; the Transports, which could not be less than 300 Sail, covered a space of at least 3 Miles; And as the part of the Island where the Camp was, is sloping ground down to the water, the whole together, exhibited, by much, the finest scene I ever Saw.

Lord Howe had arrived abt three weeks before this, but as yet no opperations had beèn commenced against New York: owing as was said: to having waited for the arrival of the reinforcemt from England, which came in only a few days before, under the command of Como Hotham, after a most tedious & tiresome passage of 14 Weeks. Lord Howe however had written to General Washington to inform him of the Powers that were lodged in him, & his Brother the General, of treating with the Colonies, granting pardons &c. The first letter, as it was directed only to George Washington Esqr &c &c &c he sent back unopend: saying he could receive no letter that was not directed to him by the Title of General Washington, Commander in Chief of the American Forces, which My Lord Howe thought proper to comply with, and his second letter was received; Also his Answer, saying he should lose no time in laying the whole before the Congress, then sitting at Philadelphia. His Lordship had also wrote to Doctor Franklyn, whose answer breathed nothing but a firm resolution of the whole colonies to throw off the Government of Gt Britain. So that whatever hopes might have been concieved of settling the dispute by negociation, it now appeared very certain that they were futile & [ne]gatory.

19th Augst — The Phoenix & Rose, which had been sent up the North River 5 weeks before, where they had been attackd by Galleys & Fireships came down this Morng passing through the Fire of the Batterys on both sides without either recieving any damage –

22d Augst — I Received orders from the Admiral to hold the Ship in readyness for covering the descent of the Troops on Long Island: In the Evening the Phoenix, Greyhound & Rose came down & Anchored near us, and at day break the Ships warped close to the Shore of Gravesend Bay. soon after the Admiral came down, hoisted his Flag on board the Phoenix and made the Signal for the Troops to land. By 8 oclock the Flat bottomd Boats appeared in three divisions, and proceeded to the shore in great order, where they landed without the least opposition; and as the Transports with the remainder of the Troops that were to be landed, followed the Boats imediately, & anchored very near the beach, there was at least 15. Thousand Men, with a large train of Artillery, on Shore in less than an hours time, the first landing being about Six thousand Men. The Boats were Commanded by Commodore Hotham, assisted by Six or eight Captains and a Number of Lieutenants, each boat carrying a Midshipman, a Coxswain & 10 Rowers.

after the Troops were landed the Admiral struck his Flag on board the Phoenix, and left Como Hotham with the Command of that Division of Transports, and to give the ne-[ce]ssary Orders for the Baggage & Horses of the Army to be sent over as soon as possible.

22d Augst Untill this day we had lain without the Narrows, now the Troops were landed, I moved the Ship near the Admiral's off the Watering place at Staten Island; where I erected Tents with my Sails for the sick Men and sent upwards of Sixty ashore, ill with fevers & scurvy, and borrowed 30 Seamen from the Bristol to replace them.

25th General DeHyster [2] with 5 Thousand Hessians crossed over to Long Island and Joind the Army, which was encamped round Flatbush. All that part of Long Island that lays opposite to New York is high land and commands the Town. The Rebels had therefore fortified it in the best manner they were able, and had thrown up a chain of Redouts & Lines to oppose the British Troops, which they expected would imediately attack them. Fortunately however this was not the Case; for General Howe, remaining quiet in his Camp at Flat bush four days, gave the Rebels such Spirits, that they determined to take the Feild the Moment they should hear the Army was in Motion.

From our Camp to the Rebels was about 7 Miles, our Troops began their March at Midnight and came on with so much silence that at day break they were discovered on the Hills before the Rebels had heard of their Moving. They however made the best disposition of their Forces they could, and for some time shewed a resolution of making a stand; par-27th Augst ticularly on their right wing which was commanded by Lord Sterling and extended down to the Water, where on Account of having a considerable advantage of ground he prevented General [James] Grant's Brigade from advancing untill near 10 Oclock, by which time the right of our Army had got so much behind the left of theirs, that they found themselves in danger of being surrounded, and having suffered considerably in their Center during the Action, they imediately gave way, and made a precipitate retreat into their Works.

The Fleet assisted in this opperation by 5 Ships getting under way and making an appearnace of attacking The Forts, on which I led with the Roebuck, and exchanged a few Shot with the Fort at Red Hook, but it was situated too high for our Guns to do it any damage. and nothing being intended more than to make a Diversion, to keep the Enemy in their Forts, I hauld off again, and upon the defeat of the Rebels Ashore, The Ships Anchored by Signal from the Admiral.

In this Action the Rebels lost in killed wounded & taken Prisoners upwards of 3 thousand Men: among the Latter were Ld Sterling & Mr Sullivan two of their Generals; who were afterwards exchanged for Genl Prescot [Richard Prescott] (who the Rebels had taken in Canada) and for Mr [Montfort] Brown Governor of the Bahama Islands that had been taken from thence by Hopkins's Squadron. The English Army had about 50 Killed & 300 wounded, mostly very slightly and by the accident of mistaking a Party of the Rebels (who were dressed in Blue) for Hessians, an officer & part of a company of Marine Granadiers fell into the Rebels hands.

After this success Genl Howe lost no time in erecting Battery's against the Rebels works, but on News being brought to the Rebel Army, that several Men of War had arrived near Hell-Gate, thro' the Sound, they saved him the trouble of using them; for on the apprehension of being surrounded, a Panick seized them, and in the Night of the 28th, they, to a Man, deserted all their works on Long Island, and crossed over in Boats to the Town; leaving all their Cannon and a great quantity of Provisions behind them.

29th Augst They still however kept possessn of Governor's Island, where they had two Regiments in Garrison. In the afternoon the General sent to them to surrender, but on their refusal, he imediately opened a Battery against it at Brookland, and two of the Roebuck's Guns being by this time placed upon Red Hook, together with the fire from her lower Deck, they were soon obliged to quit the Island, leaving every thing behind them. The Ships imediately moved up, but as night was now come on, and it was uncertain if the Fort was entirely abandoned, we neglected taking possession of it. In the Night the Rebels returned, with a Number of Boats, and carried off their Tents Baggage & Provisions

New-York Journal, THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1776

New York, August 29.

On Wednesday afternoon last week, about 5 or 6 o'clock, came up from the north, a cloud of an exceeding black and terrible appearance, from which it rained considerably, with some wind and thunder, but not near so much of either as was expected. Soon after, between 7 and 8 o'clock, came up another cloud, which some, who observed, say moved in an opposite direction, and met another cloud, supposed to be that lately passed, right over the city of New York, and parts adjacent. The effects were terrible; the rain for a long time poured down in torrents, attended with almost incessant broad streams of the fiercest lightning, and most tremendous peals of thunder, resembling in quickness after the flash, the discharges of heavy cannon, but louder, and roaring without intermission. The storm is supposed to have continued near an hour, and the height of it about half that time, exceeding in violence and terrible effects, any thing of the kind that was ever remembered here. In the house of Mr. Joseph Hallet, in Hanover Square, where soldiers were quartered, a soldier named [Abraham] Bartlett was struck dead, and two others terribly wounded by the explosion of a number of charged cartridges, an house adjoining was set on fire, but soon extinguished. One of our Row Gallies in the East-river, was struck, the mast and sprit shattered, and three men struck down, but by proper application, all recovered. A house was struck in Maiden Lane, but whether any person was hurt or not, we have not heard. The old City Hall was struck, and some of the bricks beat down, but no person hurt, Four men were killed on Long Island, and some houses and barns burnt in Toppan.

The Reprisal, the Vessel which was appointed to bring me here, sailed a few Days agoe; tis Said that several Vessels of War are laying in Wait for her; I have no reason to believe She will be taken; but if She was, I am confident She would meet with very rough Treatment . . .

The General promised me, that one of the French Frigates should convoy the Reprisal beyond the Track of the British Cruizers, but upon Receipt of Admiral Young's Letter, he called a Council, & it was thought adviseable, that it should not be done; Perhaps they were afraid of commencing Hostilities; as the French Navy is very weak in the West Indies

2. The date is approximated. Josiah Bartlett, in reporting the arrival of the Reprisal at Philadelphia, wrote that she sailed from St. Pierre on August 26, 1776. As Bingham lists her as sailing "a few Days agoe," it is assumed that "a few" might represent three days.

Connecticut Gazette, FRIDAY, AUGUST 30, 1776

New-London, August 30.

Last Saturday, two Frigates, a Brig, and a small Tender, being part of King George's piratical Fleet from Sandy Hook, came round Montauk-Point into the Sound, and have proceeded as far up as the Narrows: It is supposed their Views are to obstruct the Communication between New-York and New-England. Several Vessels that were ready to sail from this Port with Troops for New-York, are by this Means detained.

We hear that a small Vessel out of Connecticut-River, with Onions, was taken by the above Tender.

Lieutenant Elias Baldwin to Solomon Porter [1]

[Extract] New York Augt 30. 76.

Dear sir. Last night was a time of the utmost Confusion & hurry Imaginable – Our Troops from long Island retreated into the City last night. The latter part of the night when they finished their retreat was very favorable to the Design a thick fog came on Just at Day break – I believe they came of[f] without any Molestation from the Enemy. The town is now again filled with Soldiers – but all in Confusion, I hope things will be soon reduced to more Order. The Reason of this Retreat I cannot certainly learn. The heavy rains we have had here for several Days past have fatigued the men on that Station, great part of whom were without any Cover, almost to death, I never saw poor creatures look more banged than they do. – Some say the Rains have greatly injured the works there. Doubtless the Generals think them not Tenable or they never would have quitted them. The Retreat was conducted with great prudence, tho' the Measure was unexpected & surprizing to me. . . . I have this moment heard that the last division of our troops were fired upon by the Enemy as they pushed from the Shore & several killed. Tis doubtless the Enemy's design to cross the Sound below hell gate & take possession of Kings bridge. for this purpose they have Carried a Number of Boats a[c]ross the Island. should they effect this they will ruin us. But I trust they will never be able to Effect this we have a large body of Troops at Kings bridge & thereabouts –

Narrative of Abraham Leggett [1]

[July 1 to August 30]

I then with several others [at Poughkeepsie] formed ourselves in a company under the command of Barnardus Swartout all Vollenteers – the times began to appear very Interesting – the British Fleet and large army was at Staten Island – we march'd off in high spirits till we got to the Calder-barrack near the Croton River – there we staid but three days for derection – we then had news that the English army was preparing to land on Long Island – that they easy effected under the protection of Shiping – our army was at this Time on Brooklin Hights fortifying as fast as they Could – the Enemy advanced upon Part of our army under the com'd of Lord Stirling and General Sullivan – they faught on the Retreat to Flatbush Hills. There the battle became Very Hot but the Enemy was too powerful – they extended their write wing so as to cut off the retreat of our detachment from the main army, which they succeeded in and they kill'd and captured many, amongst them was several officers and the Two Gen'ls – many was Drownded in the mill Pond. This took place 28th August [sic] 1776 – the next day the 29th, Capt. Swartout crossed with us to the Island and we was placed on the left from the Hill call'd Fort Greene to Wallabout – the two armies close in view of each other, and for three Days the Rain fell in Torrents so that we could not Cook – then was the first Time I was Brought to eat Raw Pork – the last night we was on the Island myself and Several of Volunteers was put on advanced Centres [sentries] with speshel orders how to behave should we discover the Enemy advancing – the night was Foggy & very dark. Some circumstances made all the Centres return on the lines but myself – my Remaining at my station was imputed to bravery. Early in the morning yet very dark we was Paraded under the Report that we was to attack the Enemy in their lines. We was Led around we new not where till I Saw the old stone Church of Brooklin – then an officer riding by Says a groce mistake – we was orded to wheel about and remain the lines, wich we did – a dangerous attempt – there we remained till some Time after – we then formed the Rear Gard we was ordered forward, still expected to meet the Enemy till we found ourselves at the Ferry and the army all cross'd. But the Gard then under the Command of Gen'l [Thomas] Mifflin – we then was order'd to choak up the Street with waggons and Carts to Prevent the Light Horse from Rushing Down upon us – at this time no boats – I prepar'd myself to Swim the River flood tide But fortunately two Battoes struck Shore – by this Time there was but a few of us left – we all hurred on board and Shoved off – the Enemy Rush'd down on the Hill and Commenced a brisk fire. Fortunately no one was hurt in our Boat – the other Boat had four wounded – [2]

Flag of Truce, to confer with Washington & to procure himself some Necessaries.

Soon afterwards, we were most agreeably surprized to find, that the Rebels had entirely abandoned Long Island, and left every thing of Bulk and Weight behind them; soon after which our People began to fire from Red Hook upon Nutting Island.[2] This hasty Evacuation surprized us the more, as they had constructed Forts, Redoubts and Intrenchments without End. Not a Foot of Ground was unfortified. . . . Before Night they also abandoned Nutting Island, upon which likewise they had spent a great Deal of Labor. Our People harrassed them in this last Retreat by their great Guns from Brookland Ferry, Red Hook, and other Places. In the Evening some of our People, who were sent up to the Town with a Letter, by a Flag of Truce, directed to Sullivan (who is to set out to-morrow morning for the Congress at Philadelphia), observed a great Firing of Musquetry & much noise in the Town, from which they concluded, as our Troops could not possibly be there, that they were all in Confusion among themselves. The Ships of War had weighed Anchor in the Evening, and sailed up towards the Town, which, together with the rapid Progress of the Troops, 'tis imagined has occasioned a Panic. . . . The Ships cast anchor off Nutting Island, the Night coming on apace, and the army and other arrangements not being immediately ready for a great Operation.

. . . Sullivan promised me to mention Mr. Stanhope's[3] Situation, and to do what he could for his Release from Captivity

Sir, – Portsmouth, Augt. 31st, 1776

On a late Trial of a Brigantine named the Elizabeth, retaken from the Enemy on her passage to Halifax – The Jury, were guilty of a Most flagrant error in their Verdict by acquiting the Vessel & Cargo, after I had supported the fact set forth in the Lible, (vizt) that she had been in Possesion of the Enemy more than Ninty six hours, wch will plainly appear by the Masters deposition, – I cou'd not consistant with my Duty as Agent for the Continent, let the matter rest on this Verdict, Therefore have appeal'd to the Honble Continental Congress, and now forward you, the Papers of Appeal, not doubting a very different determination on the next hereof. – The Claimants made an Offer to Compromise with the Captors of £ 1000. Stg about one third of their Just Quota, this was refused. Part of them then offer'd their full share, but considering, the injustice of the Verdict, I cou'd not Consent toe it for the Continent Claim, – The bearer Como Manly was at the recapture, who can Inform you very particularly. – I likewise forward you beside the papers from the Court Maritime, Capt. Ramseys desposition who, was Master of the Brigt when taken, & the Command given him by Admiral Shuldham – also a deposition one of the Claimants desired my forwarding.[2]

In this recapture, there were, a Mr [William] Jackson a Mr [Edward] Keighley & a Mr [Richard] Newton, who claim their Good they had with them in this Vessel, undoubtedly those persons must be deem'd carrieg their Interest for the supply of the Army &c – If it shou'd be thought necessary my attendance at the Trial, shall be oblig'd you wou'd advise me, & the time appointed. also please to advise me your receipt of those Papers. – Shou'd the Honble Continental Congress, Permit a Compromise with the Claimants, (except those that were in the Vessel wd presume to think they wont allow it with them) shall be further oblig'd by an early direction thereon.– The Mode proposed, (if such a measure was permited) was to have the Goods Valued, by Three Gentlemen vers'd in Merchandize, & each Claimant to pay his Quota. I mention this for your full Information of what has been agitated since the Trial – I would presume to recommend a decision as soon as may be, for the Interest of the concern'd, as the Good has been a long time in my Care, and I fear they may injure much by laying, as they are cheifly Woolens & Linnens, or rather a greater half of those

Good. – In my Estimation the Vessel & Cargo may Yeild £30,000 Lawfl. My at Public Sale. – I am with due respect [&c.]

Dear General Buttonmould Bay Augt 31st 1776

The 24th Inst I left Crown Point, the 25th at night Anchored at Willsborough, the Same night came on a Violent Storm at N Et. the Next Day at 2 P M was obliged to weigh Anchor & return to this place, where the whole fleet arived the same evening, except the Spitfire Capt Ulmer who could not Clear the Shore & was obliged to come to an Anchor again, & rode out the Storm, tho exposed to the rake of Cumberland Bay. Fifty miles long, the hard gale made an amazeing Sea, & when I expected to hear the Gondola was Foundered, or drove on shore, she Joined us haveing received no Damage. tho a light Batteau, Veered a Stern of her was sunk, with the Sea, breaking Over her. The severe weather prevented my dispatching Lieut Whitcomb before yesterday morning, the first Fair wind, I will follow him. I should have gone this evening but the breeze is so light, night would have come on before we could have reached a safe place of Anchorage – I have had no Advices From St.Johns, or the Isle aux Nois, the earliest Intelligence I receive shall be communicated to you, emediately. I am very Anxious to hear from New York & make no Doubt, when you receive any material, Advices, I shall soon be Acquainted with it. – Inclosed is a return of the Strength of the Fleet, by which you will observe that Seventy four Men are wanting to compleat the Numbers proposed for the Vessells, which Are barely sufficient when compleat. I should be extreamly glad, they would be sent to us soon – If you think proper to Send them the bearer Lieut [James] Calderwood, will take charge of them – Mr [James] Gilliland has the only good drawft I know of Lake Champlain, which he says was Delivered Capt [Lewis] Bush for you. It will be of great Service to me as I have no Drawft of the Lake. JOURNAL OF CAPTAIN HENRY DUNCAN, R.N. [1]

[On board H.M.S. Eagle off Staten Island]

On Thursday, 29th [August 1776], General Sullivan and Lord Stirling both dined with the admiral, and were rather impudent than otherwise in talking of yesterday's engagement.[2] This day, we with several of the men-of-war moved up nearer the town; the army had got within musket shot of the rebel's works on Brookland Heights, and General Grant in the bay opposite to Red Hook.

30th, Friday. — This morning Sullivan breakfasted with us, and was afterwards sent with a flag of truce to New York and was left there. The admiral was going on shore, and was met in his barge by Colonel Sheriff, who informed him, to the surprise of the army, the rebels had quitted all their strong posts on Long Island, and deserted it entirely. Our people took posession of them, and found them strong and might easily have been defended for a considerable time. Some of the rebels, not knowing the precipitate flight of the others, were overtaken by our people by the time they got to the boats, and received a heavy fire from them, which the general believed did considerable execution.[3] This evening, we, with several of the ships, moved up within random shot of the town. The rebels quitted Governor's Island. On Saturday morning, the 31st, some few men returned to it.

1. Duncan's Journals, XX, 125–26.
2. Both generals were taken prisoner at the battle of Long Island.
3. This seems to be the British version of Washington's evacuation of Long Island. The few men left behind, and who were fired at from the shore, had been a rear guard.

VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE TO PHILIP STEPHENS [1]

Number 5. Eagle off Bedlow's Island, New York
Sir August the 31st 1776.

A Proposition having been made to me by the Commander of the Rebel Forces for an Exchange of Prisoners, Number for Number and Rank for Rank, I have thought it for His Majesty's Service to concur therein.

I have in Consequence directed that some American Prisoners taken by the Milford in an Armed Vessel from Boston [2] should be conveyed in the Rainbow to Halifax; and have desired Commissioner Arbuthnot to take the necessary Measures for effecting a suitable Exchange, with the Assistance of Sir George Collier, whom I have ordered to remain at Halifax for the better Protection and Security of that port.

Observing that the King's Service has received great Prejudice in the Decrease of the Ships' Complements by the re-capture of Vessels the property of His Majesty's disaffected Subjects, taken and manned by the Cruizers of the Squadron; I have recommended to the several Captains when making Prize of such Vessels, to take out the Crews with the most valuable parts of their Cargoes, and destroy the Vessels: Until the constitutional Authority of Government is so far restored in some part of the Colonies, that the Benefit intended by the restraining Act of the last Session of Parliament, may be better secured to the Captors than the present disordered State of the Colonies will admit. I am Sir [&c.]

Number 6. Eagle off Bedlow's Island, New York,
Sir, August the 31st 1776.

By the Hyde packet, which the General sends with his Dispatches to make known the successful Progress of the Army in its first Operations, I transmit for their Lordships Information, Duplicates of my Letters of the 28th of July, and 8th and 14th of August sent by the Sandwich Packet, No 2. 3 & 4; with Copies of such of the Papers referred to therein, as seemed to be of any Moment.

I have now to add in respect to the Changes made in the Disposition of the Ships since the Date of the last Return, that on the 19th Captain Parker in the Phoenix, with the Rose Captain Wallace, and Tryal Armed Schooner, Lieutenant [John] Brown, taking Advantage of a fresh Easterly Wind, returned from the North River thro' the Fire from the Enemy's several Batteries and joined the Fleet off Staten Island without any Loss.

The Spirit and perseverance of this small Squadron will be best explained to their Lordships by Captain Parker's Journal enclosed [2]

General Howe giving me Notice of his Intention to make a Descent in

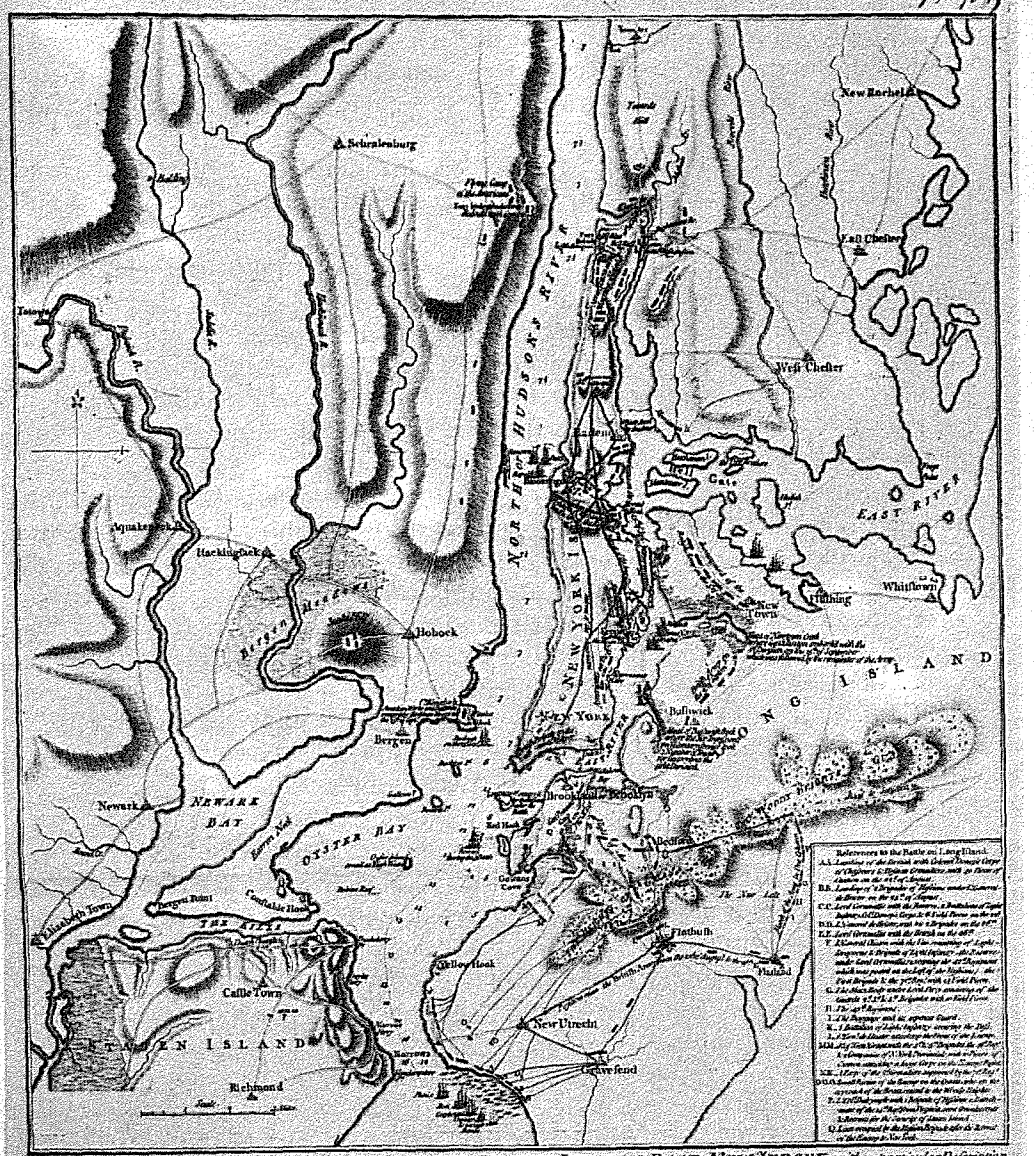
Gravesend Bay on Long Island on the Morning of the 22d, the necessary Disposition was made, and seventy five Flat Boats with eleven Batteaux and two Gallies built for the Occasion, were prepared for that Service.

The Command of the Whole remained with Commodore Hotham. The Captains Parker, Wallace and [Archibald] Dickson in the Phoenix, Rose and Greyhound, with the Thunder and Carcass Bombs under the Direction of Colonel [Thomas] James, were appointed to cover the Landing.

The Flat Boats Gallies and three Batteaux manned from the Ships of War, were formed into Divisions commanded respectively by the Captains [George] Vandeput, [Christopher] Mason, [Roger] Curtis, [Benjamin] Caldwell, [Charles] Phipps, [Toby] Caulfield, [Samuel] Uppleby and [Henry] Duncan; and Lieutenant [Samuel] Reeve of the Eagle. The rest of the Batteaux making a tenth Division, manned from the Transports, were under the conduct of Lieutenant Bristow, an Assistant Agent.



Early in the Morning of the 22d the covering Ships took their Stations in Gravesend Bay. The Light Infantry with the Reserve to be first landed, forming a Corps together of four thousand Men, entered the Boats at Staten Island at the same Time.

The Transports in which the Several Brigades composing the second Debarkation (about five thousand Men) had been before embarked, were moved down and suitably arranged without the covering Ships by eight o'Clock. The first Debarkation not meeting with any opposition, the Second succeeded immediately after. And the other Transports carrying the rest of the Troops following the former in proper Succession, the whole Force then destined for this Service, consisting of about fifteen thousand Men, was landed before Noon.

On the Diligence and Utility of Captain [John] Bourmaster and the other Agents of the Transports on that Occasion, too much Commendation cannot be bestowed.

On the 25th an additional Corps of Hessian Troops under General [Leopold von] Heister, with their Field Artillery and Baggage, were conveyed over to Gravesend Bay.

Being informed the next Day by General Howe, of his Intentions to advance with the Army that Night to the Enemy's Lines; and of his Wishes that some Diversion might be attempted by the Ships on this Side; I gave Direction to Sir Peter Parker for proceeding higher up in the Channel towards the Town of New York next Morning, with the Asia, Renown, Preston, (Commodore Hotham embarked in the Phoenix having been left to carry on the Service in Gravesend Bay) Roebuck and Repulse: And to keep those Ships in readiness for being employed as Occasion might require. But the Wind veering to the Northward soon after the Break of Day, the Ships could not be moved up to the Distance proposed. Therefore when the Corps under General [James] Grant, forming the left Column of the Army were seen to be engaged with the Enemy in the Morning, the Roebuck Captain Hamond leading the detached Squadron, was the only Ship that could fetch high enough to the Northward to exchange a few random Shewing also the Landing of the British Army on New York Island, and the Taking of the CITY of NEW YORK &c. on the 15th of September following, with the Subsequent Disposition of Both the Armies.

Shot with the Battery on Red Hook. And the Ebb making strongly down the River soon after, I ordered the Signal to be shewn for the Squadron to anchor.

It was observed, that as soon as the Centre Column of the Army was seen to have turned the Flank of the Enemy's Line opposed to General Grant, they immediately attempted to make their Retreat within their Works; But that they suffered great Loss, both in the Number killed and made Prisoners.

On the Night of the 29th the Rebels abandonned all their Posts and Works on Long Island, and retired with great Precipitation across the East River to the Town of New York.

Captain Bishop arrived in the Lively from St Augustine the 22d Instant, with Letters from Governor Tonyn.

The Governor expresses therein his Apprehensions of an Invasion of the Province under his Government on the Side of Georgia. And before the Lively sailed to give any Assistance the Captain might be able to render on that part, Advice was received that the Rebels had plundered the Settlements on Amelia Island.

I have directed Captain Bishop to return with a Supply of Provisions and Stores of such Natures as could be spared for the Ships stationed in East Florida; And to make the best Disposition of them with the Concurrence of the Governor that their State and the Supplies Captain Bishop is enabled to afford them will admit: Not having others in this port that are of the Classes, and in Condition to replace them. Captain Bishop is to call off the Capes of Virginia in his passage along the Coast to deliver Instructions to the Commander of the Otter (the Fowey being daily expected here for Water) and to the Captains of the Ships left in Cape Fear Harbour, to join me in this Port. The Cruizer is represented to be incapable of putting to Sea. And Captain [Anthony] Hunt is directed in that Case to provide for the Removal of the Company and Stores, and to evacuate and destroy the Sloop.

The Swan and Tamer are also not in a State for present Service; But the first Opportunity will be taken to give them the Repairs which it is hoped may be sufficient for enabling them to return to Europe.

Commissioner Arbuthnot having disembarked all the Naval Stores from the Britannia Store-Ship at Halifax, as I am informed by Captain [George] Montagu of the Mercury lately arrived from thence, the cruising Ships here will be greatly distressed for that Article. I have ordered the Rainbow to proceed to and remain at Halifax for the farther Security of the Port. And by that Conveyance I shall desire the Commissioner to prepare an Assortment of Naval Stores to be embarked again in the Britannia, ready to be transported here, as soon as an Opportunity offers for conducting the Store-Ship to the Fleet.

Finding the Defects of the Bristol such as cannot be conveniently repaired abroad, I propose sending her to Plymouth as soon as the Nature of the Service upon which the Squadron is now employed will admit. And in consequence of an Application made upon my Arrival here by Vice Admiral Shuldham for Leave to return to England (a Copy of which with my Answer are enclosed) I have assigned that Ship for his Conveyance.

I informed their Lordships in a former Letter that the Dispatch Schooner was separated from the Renown in the passage from Halifax; I have since learnt that the Schooner was taken soon after by an Armed Vessel of the Rebels of much superior Force; Lieutenant [John] Goodridge being killed in the Action. [3]

I send enclosed an Account of the State and Condition of the Squadron. And am Sir [&c.]

SUMMARY

Ports in England and France hummed with the activity of accelerated naval preparations. On both sides of the Channel, diplomats and informers kept their courts fully advised. Essentially the same question was being asked in London, Paris, and Madrid—"Was the purpose of this augmented naval armament offensive or defensive?"

France and Spain reasoned that the build-up of British naval strength was in excess of that required to crush the rebellious Americans, and that it could be used to descend on their West Indian possessions. Britain's concern centered on the knowledge that France saw in the American troubles a prime opportunity for revanche. The imminent prospect of war between Spain and Portugal did nothing to dispel the tension.

Silas Deane, Continental agent in Paris, after officially making his mission known to Versailles, was closely working with Beaumarchais, Dubourg and others to muster a large shipment of arms, clothing, and essential supplies for Washington's army. In spite of his efforts at concealment, Deane's identity and reason for being in France were no secret to Lord Stormont, British ambassador. Stormont also cast a suspicious eye on Beaumarchais "who was lately not worth a shilling but now has Millions at his Command."

News reaching London of the alarming number of ships being captured by American privateers sent insurance rates up, and the merchants storming to government demanding protection. The Admiralty responded by diverting Royal Navy ships to convoy duty, and by arming ordnance and store ships. Even the East India Company requested and received naval coverage for homeward bound ships laden with madras and other exotic cargo.

The King of Portugal, staunch friend of Britain, issued an edict denying American ships use of his ports. Suggestions by English envoys that it would be a pleasing gesture to George III if Spain and Holland followed suit, fell upon barren ground. The Portuguese port closure, however, led to a recommendation, backed by Beaumarchais and Deane, that American armed ships attack and seize Portuguese vessels.

Late in August, H.M. Sloop Ranger arrived at Spithead carrying dispatches from General Clinton and Commodore Sir Peter Parker telling of their complete defeat before Charleston, South Carolina. As October opened, word was anxiously awaited from the Howe brothers at New York.

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO COUNT DE VERGENNES[1]

Versailles, 26 May 1776

I have the honor to send you, Sir, the summary of the letters which were sent to me by the governors of our colonies concerning the conduct of the captains of English warships in those seas. I also enclose extracts of declarations made upon their return by the captains of merchant ships that were visited by English officers and of which several & were fired upon with shot. Since England wages an open war with her colonies of North America, our merchant ships cannot refuse at sea the visit required by the captains of English warships, and to this effect they must lower their sails at the first call as we require other nations to do for us in similar cases under penalties regulated by article 12 of the title of prizes in the ordinance of 1681.[2] The shots fired upon our merchant ships were certainly caused by some resistance or delays to which several captains confessed and they appear to me as being of little consequence, but the English officers must exercise caution with respect to our frigates and the approaches to our coasts and roads. I beg you to examine these documents and to tell me what you think of them. I shall be very happy to arrange with you the replies to be made to the various governors as well as the orders that will be sent to the ports. I have the honor to be with sincere attachment, Sir [&c.]

de Sartine

[Enclosures]

Extract of various letters concerning the English frigates cruising off St. Domingue.

From Count d'Ennery. 25 January 1776. No. 83.

Two English frigates cruise off the mole St. Nicholas and intercept the few vessels from New England that come to or leave this port. I will order two of our frigates to cruise there in order to draw them away from our coast and prevent them from sailing too close to it as well as visiting our ships, as they have been doing. They have not harmed them or insulted them, but they have visited at least 20 or 30 French vessels.

Ditto. 13 February 1776. No. 95.

The two English frigates fire solid shot upon the French vessels that want to proceed on their way. I know that we cannot prevent them from stopping the vessels from New England or from their own Nation, but it seems indecent that they should sail so close to our coast and search or visit our ships in our own waters. Consequently, I am sending to this station the frigates Amphitrite and Dédaigneuse with orders to ask them to bear off farther from our coast and prevent them from visiting our ships. Since our frigates are stronger, I hope they will comply with my protest. Furthermore, I enjoined wisdom and prudence on Messrs . . . and de Grasse but I told them not to suffer any impertinence.

From Count Le Begue. 16 February 1776.

As I was sailing under the island of Tortue and as I was beating against the wind, I met at night and very close to land an English frigate that had been cruising there for a long time against all the vessels from New England. First, she fired a blank and I payed no attention. Then she fired one round of solid shot that fell astern. Since I had not cleared for action I stood on in order to give myself time to do it, but with less sail than she carried. Indeed, she closed with me and fired a second time with solid shot; then, I clewed up my main sail. The moon was bright. I hoisted my ensign and my pennant and I payed off in order to bring my broadside to bear on her bow because she was on my quarter. I fired solid shot then with order to miss. She made signals that I could not understand and bore away right before the wind. I stood on my course towards the Cape where I arrived the next day.

Extract of the declarations made by the captains of merchant ships coming from the French colonies.

Captain Foligny of the ship Constance from Nantes, upon leaving Leogane and disemboguing, met three English frigates cruising off this port and the mole St. Nicholas. One of these frigates first hoisted a white ensign then the English ensign and sent on board his ship a boat carrying fifteen armed men. The officer commanding this boat ordered several rifle-shots before coming on board although he had brought his ship to, then he required to look over the ship as well as the papers and after asking the French captain several indiscreet questions told him to proceed on his way.

Captain Maillard of the ship Thomas from Nantes declared that on 2 March 1776 and coming out of St. Domingue he met at night off the mole St. Nicholas two English frigates that signaled him they wanted to speak to him. They then joined him after firing several solid shots at his ship. Then he bore away and clewed up his sails. They asked where he came from and where he was going and after answering these questions, they told him to proceed on his way.

Captain Menard of the ship Lilavois from Nantes declared that he met off the Island of Inagune [Inagua] an English frigate of 28 guns which hailed him and asked him where he came from and where he was going, wished him a good journey, then left him.

Messrs. Lavigne and Lalanne, owners of the ship Cérés from Le Havre declared that on the 5th of March last as their ship was disemboguing from Guadeloupe she met an English frigate that fired one solid shot upon her.

The captain hoisted the White Ensign and sailed on, but this frigate did not cease firing solid shot until the French captain hove to. The frigate sent a boat with an officer who after asking . . . why they had not brought the ship to at the first shot merely took the name of the ship and that of the captain, took note of the cargo, then withdrew.

Captain Toustaing of the ship Port de Paix coming from Port de Paix declared that on 31 March 1776 as he was in the disemboguement at about eleven o'clock in the evening, a ship fired a blank upon him, which he answered in similar manner by firing a blank. As the frigate fired a second time, but with solid shot, M. Toustaing immediately clewed up his sails. An English officer came on board his ship and looked at the papers, then told him that he was sorry but that he thought he was English.

In the Dublin Journal are the following Articles, dated Corke, May 28:

The Morres [Morris], Captain [Thomas] Bell, about 250 Tons Burthen, the Property of Morres and Williams [Willing, Morris & Co.] of Philadelphia, sailed from Havre the 17th inst. for the said Place with 300 Casks of Gunpowder, each Cask equal in Size to a Beef half Barrel 5000 Pigs of Lead, a considerable Quantity of Canvass and coarse Linen for Sails, Tents and Shirting, and twenty Chests of Arms. This Accounting may be depended on.

A Sloop is arrived at Youghal from Havre in six Days, by whom we learn that a Philadelphia Ship, commanded by Captain Bell, sailed from Havre for America about fourteen Days ago with a considerable Quantity of Gunpowder and Saltpetre on board. The Day she sailed some French Fishermen saw her taken by an English Cruizer and carried her to Portsmouth.[1]

VERGENNES TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE[1]

Versailles, 29 May 1776

I had the honor, Sir, to receive the letter which you wrote me on the 26th of this month, as well as all the enclosed documents.

I agree with you, Sir, that our merchant ships should not excuse themselves from answering the call of English warships, and it appears to me that if these have had to use force so as to oblige the former to comply with this rule, it was only after encountering resistance on their part, in view of which we have no grounds for complaint in this matter.

However the establishment of English cruises near our coasts and roads not only causes prejudice to the trade in which the inhabitants of New England engage with our Colonies, but in my opinion, it is also prejudicial to the dignity of the King and contrary to common usage.

Indeed, it is against all rules to establish cruises within range of the guns of a fort, and the King could not tolerate the English cruises without making sacrifice of the rights of his Sovereignty. I will instruct M. Garnier to make confidential representations to the Court of London in this matter and especially to present to them the facts reported by M. d'Argout[2] and suggest to them that they recommend more consideration and caution to the persons in charge of carrying out their orders.[3] However, I believe that the most effective manner to move the English ships away from our coasts and ports is to establish our own cruises in such manner that they will keep off the English ships and compel them to keep a good offing. Thus American vessels and our own will be able to sail more freely and will find means to escape inspection by the English. Furthermore, if the English are so bold as to pass our ships and sail too close to our coasts, it will be possible to chase them with gunfire without hesitation or evasion: a few examples of this kind will inspire their respect far better than the orders and threats from the Court of London.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London, 30 May 1776

You may have been informed, My lord, that the Frenchmen who were in Philadelphia and about whom there was a great deal of talk in this country were captured upon their return on an American vessel and brought to Lord Dunmore, Governor of Virginia, who sent them here on board the vessel that was shipwrecked off Cape Lizard. There were three of them. The youngest one perished. The other two were questioned with respect to the purpose of their trip. They said that they had left St. Domingue with a cargo of molasses which they had sold at great benefit in America. The older one of the two that were left had been a musketeer. Since they had lost everything in this shipwreck and there were no papers to provide more information about them, the Government gave them everything they needed in order to return to France, considering that, being at peace with us, they could not hold Frenchmen prisoners in England although they had been captured on American vessels; a very wise decision on the part of the Government.

The two Battalions of Hessian Grenadiers sailed from Portsmouth on the 24th of this month, under convoy of the Frigate Repulse, 32 guns. 35 vessels carrying war ammunition, victuals and 500 recruits joined this same convoy.

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO COUNT D'ENNERY, GOVERNOR OF SANTO DOMINGO [1]

Versailles, 30 May 1776

I had anticipated, Sir the observations that you brought to my attention concerning the need to send a few of the King's Ships to cruise off St. Dominique. As soon as he received news of the offensive actions committed by the English frigates in the waters of this Colony, the King had ordered that two frigates and one corvette be stationed there in order to enforce the authority of the French flag. The frigate La Tourterelle under the command of M. de Beaussier and the corvette L'Etourdie under the command of M. Le Begue now stationed at St. Domingo are destined for this mission. These Officers have been directed to give you a copy of their Orders in which the King's Instructions are explained in detail. You will please to see that they be properly executed. H.M. recommends that you do not change anything in the arrangements that he made unless extraordinary circumstances which he could not foresee compelled you to do so.

You will send me in double envelope, the first one marked For You Only, your reports with respect to the orders of Messrs. Beaussier and Le Begue and the Officer who will be in command of the frigate which is to be sent to you. I have the honor to be with sincere attachment, Sir [&c.]

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO LIEUTENANT DE L'ABBADIE, COMMANDING THE SLOOP OF WAR Le Rossignol[1]

Versailles, 30 May 1776

I enclose herewith, Sir, particular Instructions which will give you directions relative to your cruise while you will be stationed at Martinique. It is His Majesty's intention that you give a copy of these Instructions to M. D'Argout, Governor General; you will please to comply therewith.

It is said in the Instructions which you received as you left France that one of the main objects of your cruise is to put a stop to illegal trade. The new Instructions which I am sending you alter this arrangement: It is possible that circumstances and the needs of the Colony require that less vigilance be exercised in this area. Consequently, H.M. [His Majesty] recommends that you comply with the orders you will receive from the Governor General.

You will send me in double envelope, the first one marked For You Only, the reports relative to your Cruise as directed in the new Instructions which I am sending you. I have the honor to be, &c.

Sir, [Admiralty Office] 31 May 1776.

Lord Weymouth, One of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, having transmitted to my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty Copy of a Letter he received from Mr Consul Hardy at Cadiz, dated the 3d Instant, giving an account that his Majesty's Frigate Enterprize and Zephir Sloop, had been for several days cruizing off that Port, and had chased and searched some Vessels very near the entrance of the Bay, which proceedings gives great umbrage there, and he is apprehensive may cause Complaints from the Court of Spain; I am commanded by their Lordships to acquaint you therewith, and to recommend it to you to order the Commanders of the Cruizers which you may station from time to time to intercept Ships and Vessels belonging to the Rebellious Colonies of North America, to avoid cruizing in sight of the Ports, and not to approach the Coasts of Spain so as to give any Interruption to the Subjects or Trade of that Nation, or any just cause of Complaint. I am &ca

GIAMBATTISTA PIZZONI TO HIS GOVERNMENT IN VENICE [1]

Most Serene Prince, London, 31 May 1776

After the Royal Army decided to abandon Boston for reasons already explained, there was a rumor that its Commanding General Howe had sailed for Halifax, capital of Nova Scotia; however, such information has now become doubtful. Some persons who believe themselves current with the military deployment of this Court in America maintain that after the fleet of transports had arrived at a certain point to mislead the Americans regarding his voyage to Halifax, he suddenly changed course for Long Island, that is Isola Lunga, a very short distance from New York, capital of the same Province. In fact, as said Island is situated facing the midpoint of the very extensive English American coastline, such situation appears very suited to favor any enterprise by the Royal Army. However, while well founded news is awaited on this matter, a ship has come from America, bearing the news of American uncertainty as to where the campaign will be opened by choice, along with a notice to this Ministry of having met at sea on the [21st] day of the month expiring, at a long distance from St. Helena Island, the Warship Eagle of this Crown, which ship was sailing under fair wind toward this Continent and was carrying Admiral Lord Howe; it is then reasonably conjectured that the first of the two expeditions of troops thus far sent has arrived at its destination, and that the second is about to arrive. . . .

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO THE COMMISSIONERS IN NANTES AND BORDEAUX[1]

Versailles, 31 May 1776

The English Minister Plenipotentiary, Sir, was informed that a Dutch ship loaded with 40 thousand pounds of Powder destined for Bordeaux and two others loaded with 45 thousand pounds destined for Nantes recently left Amsterdam. The Court of London thinks that this Powder is eventually destined for New England. We have been requested to send orders to our ports and prevent this destination to be reached. Although I have grounds to assume that this supply of Powder is destined, on the contrary, to our traders on the Cost of Guinea, who turned to Holland after being unable to obtain any from England as they used to, I thought necessary to remind you again that His Majesty's intention is that his subjects shall not supply any war ammunition to the rebels of North America. You will please to give all your attention to this matter and keep your eyes open on the Dutch ships that might bring powder into your port.

GABRIEL DE SARTINE'S INSTRUCTIONS TO THE CAPTAINS IN OR ORDERED TO THE WEST INDIES[1]

Draft of Instructions corresponding to those of the Spanish Court for the four Frigates and the three Corvettes which His Majesty proposes to keep operational and on observation cruises in the Windward Islands and Santo Domingo.

His Majesty having deemed necessary to keep four frigates and three corvettes stationed in the American Sea, these instructions will explain to M.————to whom is entrusted the Command of————the line of conduct he is to maintain during his cruise and inform him more perfectly of the object of his mission. H.M. thought it pertinent to disclose to him the respective missions of the other frigates or corvettes and to indicate to him the areas to be guarded by the said frigates and corvettes of H.M. as well as by those of H.Cath.M. [His Catholic Majesty.]

The precautions which must be observed in the present circumstances require that particular attention be directed to the routes which the English might follow as they sail from the New England Ports to the Gulf of Mexico, the Island of Cuba, Santo Domingo, Puerto Rico, Guadeloupe and Martinique.

Spain will direct four frigates to cruise in the following waters:

One to cruise 30 or 40 leagues Northward of the North East point of Puerto Rico.

A second one will cruise between the western point of Puerto Rico and the eastern point of Santo Domingo.

A third one, between the eastern point of Cuba and Mayaguana.

A fourth one, between the western point of Cuba and Vezil [Sisal?] and the place where one begins to take soundings before reaching Campeche.

By these dispositions, all passages on the lee-side of the Antilles are guarded by Spanish frigates; and it would be difficult for the English to reach the Gulf of Mexico without being sighted by one of these frigates stationed there on observation.

The Frigates and Corvettes which H.M. proposes to keep armed in the American Sea will receive the following assignments:

The Frigate L'Aigrette under the command of Captain Thomas Dorves will cruise to windward of Martinique and patrol Northward as far as the parallel of the southern point of Guadeloupe or that of Marie Galante and Southward as far as the parallel of the North Eastern point of St. Lucia.

The Frigate La Licorne under the command of Captain de Peynier will cruise to windward of Guadeloupe and will extend her cruise Northward as far as the parallel of Barbuda and Southward as far as the parallel of Dominica.

These two frigates will observe the English ships that will come to scout the Antilles in order to pass either to the North, or to the South of these Islands, or through the channels lying between them.

The Corvette Le Rossignol commanded by Lieutenant de L'abbadie will cruise to leeward of Martinique and will maintain such a course that she will always be able to reach Guadeloupe.[2]

The Corvette Le Rossignol[3] commanded by Lieutenant Dussault will cruise to leeward of Guadeloupe and will extend her cruise towards Saint Christopher.

The Corvette L' Etourdie commanded by Lieutenant Le Begue will cruise to the North of the French Cape of Santo Domingo and will extend her cruise towards the Caicos Islands.[4]

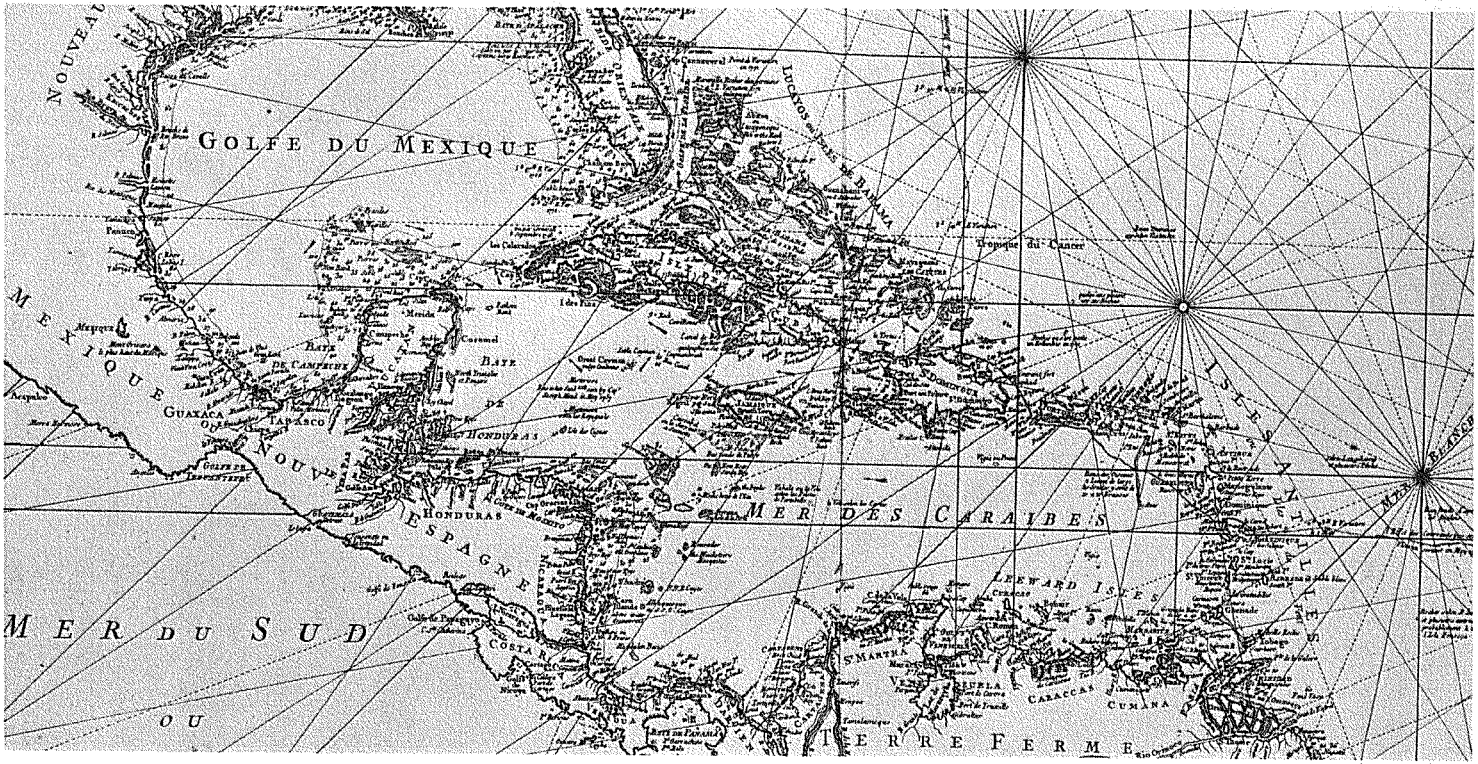
The Frigate La Renommée, commanded by Captain de Monteil will cruise off St. Nicholas Mole and towards the Great Inagua.[5]

This Frigate and the Corvette Le Serin will observe the Ships that might want to reach the Old Channel.

Finally, the Frigate La Tourterelle, commanded by Captain Beaussier de Chateauvert, will cruise to the South of Fort St. Louis to Santo Domingo in order to observe the Ships which might pass through the Channel between this Island and Jamaica.

The only instructions which H.M. will give to the Commanders of his Frigates and Corvettes destined to cruise in the waters as directed above in order to observe the possible movements of the English Squadrons are limited to the following points to which M.————will pay the greatest attention.

1) They should hide as much as possible, even from their crews, the purpose of their cruise.



2) They should all act in concert exchanging intelligence which may guide them as much, of course, as distances and circumstances will allow it, while each one will keep strictly to the primary object of his mission.

3) With regard to inspecting and detaining of English Vessels, they should not stray from the general practice which has been followed up to now, that is to say, they should pretend that they are trying to stop smuggling on the coasts of the Isles belonging to H.M.; but each time they will be able to detain some Vessel on these just grounds they will attempt to obtain information as to the destination, movements, and business of the Ships of the English Fleet.

4) Rather than trying to intercept the illicit trade of the Americans, they should be more concerned with maintaining their cruises at fairly good distance in order to keep the English Frigates away and to prevent their daring to come too close to the French Isles or visit the harbors and various anchorages as they have already done.

5) In the event that a Vessel from New England, belonging to the Insurgents, would be pursued by an English Frigate and would ask for the protection of the French Flag, the Commanders of the King's Frigates and Corvettes will grant it to her, and if in spite of the declaration made to this effect the English Frigate still attempts to seize her, the said Commanders will oppose such an action and will use the forces entrusted to them by H.M.

6) They will act likewise with regard to Neutral Vessels having left European or American Ports and laden with ammunition or other kinds of Aid for the Insurgents; and in the event that one of these Vessels would be pursued by an English Frigate and would ask for the protection of the King's Flag, the Commanders of His Majesty's Frigates and Corvettes would not allow that said Vessel be inspected. But in both preceding cases, they are not to move towards said Vessels and must wait until circumstances bring those close enough to ask for the protection of the King's Flag, nor are they to try and facilitate through their own manoeuvres those which the said Vessels may make in order to approach His Majesty's Frigates and Corvettes.

Gulf of Mexico and Caribbean Sea.

7) They should be prompt to communicate to the French Governors all the intelligence they will receive and their own findings, particularly to the Governor more concerned by this Information than the others by reason of securing the Colony whose defence is entrusted to him.

8) In pertinent cases the same information should be given to the Governors of the main Spanish Colonies because, independently from the fact that both Nations share the same interest in this matter, the subjects of His Catholic Majesty will endeavour on their part to obtain other intelligence which they will heedfully communicate to the French Governors.

9) If they should encounter His Catholic Majesty's Warships and Frigates, they should conduct themselves towards their Commanding Officers with suitable courtesy and trust and exchange information they might have which might be useful to the Service of both Monarchs.

10) Finally, at every available opportunity they should approach Vessels returning to France and those arriving in American waters, and use the former to acquaint His Majesty and the latter to acquaint the French Governors with everything of interest they may have discovered or learned during their cruise.

The Commanders of the Frigates and Corvettes will coordinate all their operations with the Commandants of the Islands where they will be stationed.

His Majesty enjoins the said Commanders to remain at sea as long as possible and to put into Port only when pressing needs will compel them to do so or when they will have intelligence for the Commandants of the Colonies.

Dr. Barbeu Dubourg to Vergennes[1]

Monseigneur Paris 31st May 1776

Permit me to impart to you my uneasiness with regard to our great affair, and, above all, as to the man who has the charge of it.

You have seen the contract passed between the secret committee of the Colonies, and ratified by the General Congress, of the one part and the Sires Pliarne and Penet of the other; so we could not doubt the intentions of the Congress. But it seems likely enough that, having but very recent and slight knowledge of these two men, who have offered themselves to them at a moment when they were not in a position to choose, they have accepted their proposals, without, however, having full confidence therein, and that they have taken what precautions they could to bridle him whom they were sending into France charged with their commissions.[2]

M. Penet was born in Alsace the son of an artillery store keeper who, having many children, could give them but a mediocre education. This one went to seek his fortune in America, and, at his departure, did a stroke of business, not indeed of a dishonest man but of a not very scrupulous adventurer. He obtained from M. de Monthieu, 600 Muskets upon credit as a private venture and their lender was many years without receiving news of him; but, at last, when he believed all lost he received about half his principal and interest combined. This story is well vouched for. One cannot conclude much from it if there was nothing to support it. Let us pass to another point.

This M. Penet has told me that he has letters from Messrs. Franklin and Rush for me, which remain in Holland with his large pack and that he has sent to have it forwarded to me here. I am impatient to receive this packet, which will, perhaps, teach me more of the way of thinking of the American Committee. Meanwhile this man evinces the greatest desire to form a partnership to share with me, upon very liberal terms, all the benefits of the immense trade of which the most fortunate prospect seems to offer itself to him alone; whence it seems possible to conclude that he feels the need of a little support.

Finally, what appears to me more conclusive than everything else, is that he confided to me last night that for all consignments he shall make either of men or stores he will be obliged to draw upon M. Swenghausen,[3] or Chevisgouze banker, at Nantes, but that the letters which shall authorize him therein were not delivered to him at once, and are only to come to him by the vessels expected at Nantes from America, to take in cargo—proof that they have not thought fit to put themselves altogether at his discretion.

That being the case, Monseigneur, it seems to me necessary, in the first place to try and get to the bottom of all that, in the second place to provide in one way or another for the pressing needs of our good friends the Colonists of America.

To fulfil the first object,—would there be no means of making inquiry in Alsace about him personally, at Nantes as to the power entrusted to him and the advices transmitted from America to the banker Swengause [Schweighauser]? This latter point is the most important, but only a commandant or intendant, commisssoned thereto by the Court could manage it. That is too far beyond my reach. Still, could we not facilitate and accelerate the arrival of the packs from Holland, which should contain these letters, with details, more or less, about him?

And supposing that we could only deal with much reserve and caution with the Sieur Pennet, how could we contrive so as not to leave the Colonies destitute of the resources most necessary to their defence, in which France has so great an interest? I am very devoted to them, looking upon this new State almost as my second country. I flatter myself that they honour me with a singular confidence and I would rather die than abuse it in any way; but my arms are not long enough to embrace an object of this importance. I implore your goodwill for them, your protection for myself. I have the honour to be with profound respect [&c.]

M. Barbeau DuBourg Doctor of Medicine
Rue Copeau—Paris

Versailles the 1st June 1776

I have just received, Monsieur, the letter of yesterday which you have thought good to write to me, in order to inform me of your uneasiness about the person who presented himself to you as recommended by your friends, and who cannot now produce his credentials.[2] The most favourable judgment one can pass upon the man in question is that he is one of those fortune-seekers who are willing to enrich themselves at any cost; that, with this aim, he has been to offer his services you know where, that they have been accepted and that thinking to find people here equally bold and venturesome he has perhaps undertaken to supply to distant parts what he is seeking to obtain here, only to receive the price of it after delivery. So reckless a party not being of a kind to find associates, I think you would do very well, Monsieur, to put a check upon the facilities which you seemed inclined to procure for this man, and above all, not to answer for anyone whatsoever. One advice, moreover, which I cannot omit to give you is to inspire this man and his adherents with the greatest caution in their manner of dealing and dispatching business. You are aware that if the object of his negociation were to acquire sufficient publicity for direct and well defined complaints to reach us we could not avoid giving redress and so putting a stop to everything. Pray recollect what I told you, one can connive at certain things but one cannot authorize them.

The enquiries which you suggest, Monsieur, would be, at the least, useless; the production of the credentials is what you ought to insist upon; in default, avoid everything which would implicate you, and consequently compromise you. I am &c

[Extract] London, 4 June 1776

There was an action at sea between the Frigate Glasgow and some American Privateers that dared attack her. The fight was obstinate, but both parties separated without much damage. The frigate returned to a port of Rhode-Island, and the Privateers to the Port of New-London in the province of Connecticut.[2]

The number of horses being embarqued for America amounts to thirteen hundred at the rate of 12 tons per horse. The freight cost is 13 shillings and 6 pence per ton, and the freight for fodder costs 5 pounds Sterling per Ton. As you can see, My lord, this [is] quite an expense for this one item, the least important in this famous expedition. When we recall that the original purpose behind this enormous expense was to impose a small tax to America, we seem to see an Alchemist of a new kind throwing into his crucible everything he can gather that is made of gold and precious metals in order to turn it into lead: this ruinous and mad war is the reverse of the Philosopher's stone for England.

(No 9) Whitehall 5th June 1776

Sir, I have received your Dispatches numbered 1 & 2, and your Letter of the 27th of March and have laid them before the King.[2]

The Information you had received, of the Arrival of so considerable a Body of Troops at St Domingo was a just ground of Alarm, and His Majesty very much approves of the prudent Measures you took for the safety of the Island, without interrupting it's Commerce, or exciting too strong Apprehensions of Danger to the Inhabitants.

Mr [Charles] Cobb's Letter contains so exact a State of the Military Forces in the Island, as leaves no room to suspect that the Count d'Ennery has any Instructions to employ it in any hostile Enterprises; but at the same time you cannot, in the present Circumstances, be too much upon your Guard, and every Precaution that can be taken without exciting Jealousy, or creating Alarm ought to be made use of, to prevent any Surprise, and to obtain constant & exact Information of what is passing, in both the French & Spanish Islands, and His Majesty relies upon that Zeal & Attachment for his Service, which has hitherto distinguished your Conduct, for exerting you to continue your Attention to these important Objects.

PHILIP STEPHENS TO VICE ADMIRAL CLARK GAYTON, JAMAICA[1]

Sr 5 June 1776.

Have received & communicated to my Lords Commrs of the Admty your letter of the 28th of March last, with it's several Inclosures,[2]

Their Lordships are satisfied with the reasons you have given for ordering the Naval Storekeeper at Port Royal to purchase the Lady Keith Schooner, and, considering her as one of the three Schooners which they have directed you to purchase, will confirm the Order you have given Mr Francis Le Montais to be Lieut & Commander of her.

My Lords approve of your having employed an Attorney to defend you in the several Actions brought against you for the detention of the Vessels seized, as belonging to the Rebel Colonies, and part of their Crews; but their Lordships commanded me to inform you that you should have defrayed the Expence yourself and charged it in your contingent account, instead of directing the Naval Storekeeper to pay it.

I have only to add that their Lordships have sent to the Navy Board an Extract of so much of your Letter as relates to the Surgeon of the Maidstone, the appointment of those Officers being vested in that Board, and to assure you that I am &c

Whereas the Commissioners appointed by Acts of Parliament for the Discovery of Longitude at Sea &c have agreed with Mr William Bayly to proceed in His Majesty's Sloop Discovery on her present intended Voyage in order to make Nautical and Astronomical Observations and to perform other Services tending to the improvement of Geography and Navigation (as you will see by the Copy of his Instructions which will be sent you by their Secretary) and have desired that he may be received on board the abovementioned Sloop; And whereas we have ordered Captain Clerke her Commander to put himself under your Command and follow your Orders for his further proceedings You, are therefore hereby required and directed to cause the said Mr Bayly, together with his Servant, Instruments and Baggage to be received on board the Discovery accordingly; directing Captain Clerke to victual him and his Servant during their continuance on board in the same manner as her Company are, or shall be, victualled; and to give him all convenient accommodation and such assistance and support as he may stand in need of from time to time to carry his said Instructions into execution and to be particularly careful, whenever there are convenient opportunities and he shall be desirous of landing in order to make observations on shore, to furnish him with a proper Boat and with a sufficient Number of Men, as well to assist in fixing his Instruments as to protect him from any annoyance or disturbance which may be attempted to be given him by the Natives during his stay; and to land, at the same time, a sufficient Quantity of Provisions and Necessaries for the use of himself and Servant, and the Persons who may be put on shore to assist and protect him as above directed.

And whereas the said Commissrs have thought it expedient to send out for trial during your present intended Voyage, two Watch Machines which have been made by Mr Kendal in consequence of their directions, one of them, being a Copy of that made by the late Mr Harrison and the same that was sent out with you upon your last Voyage, on board the Sloop you command, and the other being of the said Mr Kendal's own Construction and having never yet been at Sea for trial, on board the Discovery; and in order as well to prevent any improper management, or ill treatment of the said Watch Machines as any suspicions thereof have desired that the Keys of the three different Locks which are affixed to the Boxes in which those Watch Machines are respectively kept, and which Keys will be sent to you: by the Astronomer Royal may be disposed of in a manner similar to that which was practiced on the like occasion during your last Voyage, You are hereby further required and directed immediately after they come to your hands, to dispose of the said Keys (which to guard against Accidents will be sent in Duplicate) in the following manner, Vizt, to keep those of one of the Locks of the Box containing the first mentioned Watch Machine yourself, and to deliver those of the other Locks of that Box to your 1st and 2d Lieutenants respectively; and you are to be present yourself, and to take care that your said Lieutenants be present also, every day at the winding up of the said Watch Machine and to see that the respective times shown thereby be properly inserted, and attested under your and their hands respectively, in the general observation Book, agreeable to the 2d Article of the abovementioned Instructions to Mr Bayly; and you are to give orders that the Keys of two of the Locks on the Box containing the other Watch Machine be kept in the Custody of Captain Clerke and his first Lieutenant respectively, that they be present every day at the winding up of the said last mentioned Watch Machine by Mr Bayly, and that they do see that the inspection times shewn thereby be properly inserted and attested agreeable to the abovementioned Article of Mr Bayly's Instructions, a Copy of which you are to deliver to Captain Clerke; But, if it shall happen that you yourself or your first or second Lieutenant, cannot, at any time, through indisposition, or absence upon other necessary duties conveniently attend as above directed, you are, in such case, to take care that the Keys in the Custody of the Person who cannot attend be delivered to some other Officer of the Sloop you command, whom you can best trust therewith, in order that he may supply the Place of such Invalid or Absentee; and you are to give similar directions to Captain Clerke with respect to the Keys which are in the Custody of himself and his first Lieutenant respectively. London [June 5].

An old Seaman remarks, that the Provincial Squadron cannot be very formidable, since the Glasgow, an old 20 Gun Ship, engaged and beat the whole Squadron: However, none of them are taken, as was at first reported.

The Glasgow Man of War, of 20 Guns, and 160 Men, was attacked by Commodore Hopkins's Fleet on the 20th of April [sic April 6] off Newport in Rhode-Island; and notwithstanding the Superiority of both Guns and Men, yet got clear off.

Commodore Hopkins's Fleet consists of two Ships, the Alfred, of 34 Guns, 330 Men, commanded by himself; the Columbus, of 30 Guns, 300 Men, by Capt. Whipple; with two Brigs and two Sloops; the Number of Guns on board the same amount to 104.[1]

1. This report, the first reasonably accurate summary of the engagement between the Glasgow and the Continental fleet, probably "leaked" out of the Admiralty Office before the release on June 8 of Captain Tyringham Howe's account which was published in the London Gazette, June 4 to June 8, 1776.

Mrs. Johnstone[2]

I received your Letter of the 23d May. I will perform "my" promises "in the way I have pointed out." I am about to send to Cape François in the island of St Domingo, a Ship loaded with Merchandize to the value of £25000, besides Cannon, Powder and Stores, but this last article will arrive but in small Parcels on account of the risque. "On your part do not fail to send a Ship loaded with good Virginia Tobacco," and let your friend send in the Ship an intelligent discreet and faithful Person with powers to receive the Money or Merchandize and Powder, "and to make the remittances in Tobacco," which I can no more do without, than your friend can without what I send to him in a word, let him give his Notes to my House for what he shall not be able to pay in Tobacco, and make certain and solid arrangements with my Agent at the Cape for the future.

The Captain on his arrival at the Cape must enquire of the first Magistrate, who is the Merchant entrusted with the affairs of Roderique Hortalez and Co. and he will introduce him to the correspondent of your humble Servant.[3]

ESTIENNE CATHALAN TO WILLING, MORRIS & CO.[1]

Gentlemen – Marseilles the 6th June 1776 –

I confirm what I did myself the pleasure of writing you by Mr Van Horne, who I hope will long ere this, be arrived, & the Cargo under his direction safely Landed with you; he will him self have related to you the many obstacles we had to surmount in procuring it here, as such a Cargo had never before been shipped from any port of France; and the publick Orders relative to the Articles it was composed of expressly & rigourously prohibited their Exportation. In order then to obtain a Secret permission, it was absolutely necessary to go to Paris, as such would never have been granted to any one in writing; every thing I could desire was granted me there, but on my return I found I had still many other difficulties to encounter here, & at Toulon, which I at last got over with much trouble & perseverance: and I rest upon the whole so much the more satisfied that in having succeeded for Mr Van Horne, I open'd the way to others in this Kingdom, who have supplied both our Islands & your Continent with these Commodities.

Our worthy friend Mr Thomas Morris arrived here about 12 days ago, I have since had the pleasure of Several Conferences with him on the present state of affairs, and as he possesses a very great share as well of political as Commercial Knowledge, the Informations he has been pleased to give me, have affor[d]ed me the most perfect Satisfaction

Your firm resolutions to maintain your priviledges are certainly very just & commendable, & it was very pleasing to me to learn that you were in a state to enable you to render unfruitfull the Efforts of Great Britain, & frustrate her designs to deprive you of your Liberty. may the God of Justice protect you, & secure to you the Conservation of your Rights, these are my Sincere prayers; but I cannot look upon all the present Horrors of this Cruel warr, & it's consequences perhaps still more fatal, without being deeply affected, and would be exceedingly happy if I or my friends could be in any way instrumental, in stopping those Rivers of such noble Blood, in these Circumstances so much profused. I highly disapprove of the injustice of the British Government, in not listening to your Complaints, as I do of their Obstination to Submit you to Laws contrary to your priviledges. all the Neutral Nations in general, & France in particular, warmly blame Such a Conduct, the English them Selves are Sensible of the Impropriety of their proceedings, which they have carried too far to retract, it would be manifesting their real weakness if they now consented to grant what they have So constantly refused; But there is an Expedient which would be equally creditable for you and decent for great Britain. I mean that the Continental Congress should demand the mediation of some respectable power in Europe, who might terminate in an amicable way all your troubles and preserve your Rights. I think there is the greatest reason to believe, that the English Government would readily & willingly grant in favor of such a mediating power, what they have so constantly & obstinatly denied you. If you inclined to make choice of our Court, I would act with equal Zeal & Satisfaction for your Just cause; the Equity, Justice, & powerfullness of our Sovereign are I believe too well known in England to refuse his mediation, which I have some ground to presume you might obtain.

Having thus given you my Sentiments in favour of a happy reconciliation, which I hope you will approve of, I shall proceed to inform you that Mr Ts Ms has communicated to me the Contents of a Letter he has received from your Committee of Correspondence, and in the Several Conferences we have had together expressed great desire to be informed the dispositions of this Court towards America (as he appears to join in oppinion with me that nothing can be done in her favour in Spain) & whether in case of not being able to continue the Warr against England, alone, the Colonies might in such case place a dependance, on being heartily join'd by the French, on their become thenceforeward Subjects under the protection of France, as they have here to fore been under that of Great Britain. I am of opinion they very readily might assist them as the advantages which would accrue to this Kingdom from such a Junction would certainly be very great yet any thing I could now Say upon this Subject would be mere conjecture, & consequently not worthy of your attention. But I have written in strong terms thereon to a friend of mine whose employ at Court gives him free access & great Credit with the Minister, and on his answer if there is the least glimpse of being favorably received, Mr T. M. will sett out for Paris, & if necessary, I shall accompany him thither; and how soon we can learn any thing certain & a sure conveyance offers you may depend on its being immediately communicated to you either by Mr. T. M. or me. but in the mean time I must observe to you that I much doubt if the above mentioned Letter from the Committee, which Simply request him to get information without empowering him to treat or conclude any thing, will be thought Sufficient to obtain audience at Paris.

As to assistance by furnishing you with ammunition & stores, you may rest fully assured that any of your Vessels which may come hither in search of them will not here after meet with the Least difficulty in obtaining their Cargoes. I could now ship any Articles you might have occasion for without any further permissions being necessary than the one I have already obtained, if you thought proper to send back Capn Van Horne's Vessel or any others, by making them a french Bottoms & dispatching them for one of our Island, Called St Pierre Miquelon, to the South west of New found Ld, every possible risk would be avoided.

all Kind of woolen Cloaths may be had here. I intended sending you Samples of the different qualities of them which I have wrote for, into the Country, by this opportunity, but they are not yet Come to hand; and all the Medecinal Drugs of the Levant may be purchased here considerably cheaper than any where else —

I shall conclude this Letter, with assuring you that [it] is my hearty desire to be of any service in my power to America; & that there is nothing

I would not undertake for her interests, or to evince the Sincere regard & Esteem with which I very respectfully remain Gentlemen [&c.]

Estienne Cathalan

[P.S.] I have omitted to mention that I am bound to our Aldmiralty office, under a penalty of £10,000, for the safe return to this Port of Capn Troud, & his Crew, in the Vessel he carried from hence (the danger of the Seas & restraint of Princes only excepted) wherefore Should he appears with you, please by no means fail to Send him & his Vessel back, & in case of reloading her at your place, the Cargo must be declared in the Bills of Lading as for my account –

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London, 7 June 1776

My lord, we cannot mark without justifiable alarm the daring acts of which the English Sea Officers are capable. As the war gets hotter, they will become more dangerous; and their avidity for spoils will increase as they get used to firing their guns. If the English people are generally proud and greedy, it can be said with them maritime pride exceeds national pride by several degrees and that the sailors are the most miserly and at the same time the most prodigal of all the people in England. The name of Lord Howe Commanding the naval forces over such an extended Coastline is more likely to exalt than temper this pride, and I sincerely hope that the British Ministry will not have to repent for employing him in circumstances that require more caution than valor and more shrewdness than military talent.

The facts presented in the various documents which you were kind enough to send me are assuredly of a dangerous as well as offensive nature. In conformity with your instructions, My lord, I spoke of it yesterday to Lord Suffolk in a friendly and confidential manner, telling him that our confidence in the promises and good intentions of the English Ministers had prevented us up to now from taking the precautions which circumstances might require for the protection of our Islands and our trade, but that, however, the Governors of St. Domingue and Martinique were complaining bitterly of the conduct on the part of the Commanding Officers of the English frigates cruising in the Seas neighboring our Colonies. "I know, Sir,["] this Minister replied immediately, ["]that a large quantity of powder leaves your Islands for America, that the American ships carry it under the French flag; I positively know this, so that I cannot doubt it." Although he was looking down, Lord Suffolk put a remarkable amount of dignity into these words.

I answered that it could very well be that the Americans obtained powder from our islands and others, and that I was equally convinced that England was no more sterile for them in this respect than any other country where there were people interested in this sort of smuggling. As for the flag, the English Frigates use ours as well as the American ships, from which I concluded it apparently was a ruse of war employed by both parties; furthermore, that the King's attitude towards His British Majesty was friendly and obliging enough to arouse all the gratitude of the King of England and his Administration; that these were the feelings which he had often expressed to me himself.

I went on with my speech presenting our detailed grievances against their officers, especially Captain [Robert] Keeler Commanding the Corvette Lynx which has just arrived in Portsmouth. I explained that he would agree with our motive for speaking confidentially since such procedures were obviously contrary to the intentions of the British Ministry and since our purpose was to bring him on the one hand to punish the defaulters, especially Captain Keeler, in a manner he would deem most suitable, and on the other hand to provide more effective means than in the past to prevent the repetition of such violations.

Lord Suffolk found my request to be very modest and promised to take it into consideration. I observed that I did not show him the letters in which our Governors express themselves with all the resentment inspired by pranks which they consider as an insult to the Sovereignty of the King as well as the respect due his flag, and that, wishing to avoid anything official in my approach, I preferred to tone down the affair rather than make it worse.

The Minister did justice to my intentions as well as my procedure. He agreed that our ports, our roads and our coasts should be respected, and that once the Americans were in our waters their shelter should be sacred; he assured me that he would speak to Lord Weymouth and to the Admiralty without wasting time.

Of course, I did not want to leave any trace of doubt with respect to the words used by Lord Suffolk when he interrupted me so seriously, and I thought it was best not to be afraid and come back to this matter. I therefore confessed to him that I was quite surprised he had placed this matter first in reply to what I had to tell him, and I asked him if his intention was that I report it to my Court. The Minister answered that he mentioned this fact only to show me the necessity that compelled them to visit most strictly the ships bound for or coming from our Colonies; furthermore, that he did not impute this traffic of powder to the Government, but merely to individuals who found it to their interest to sell ammunition to the Americans as the inhabitants of St. Eustache and other islands do it.

My lord, this is what happened during my conference with Lord Suffolk on the subject which you had assigned to me. Lord North to whom I mentioned this assured me that since my last grievances new orders had been sent but that distances caused delays in their execution.

The frigate Aldborough which ran aground recently in Plymouth was pulled out and towed into the harbor on the 2nd. Her crew relates that she went through our Squadron composed of 2 Ships of the line, 3 frigates, 2 Corvettes and three Transport ships which appeared to be sailing for the Coast of Guinea.

London Chronicle, THURSDAY, JUNE 6 TO SATURDAY, JUNE 8, 1776

London [June 8].

On Thursday night advice was received, by express from Falmouth, that the Glasgow man of war was arrived there from Halifax. She was sent with dispatches from General Howe, which were carried to the Secretary of State's office. She sailed from Halifax the 12th of May.

The following letter was received yesterday at Lloyd's Coffee-house, dated Bristol, June the 5th:

> I hereby certify, that I sailed from Jamaica the 19th of April, in the ship called the Mars, and on the 4th of May, in lat. 29.40. and long. 67.30. I fell in with a letter of Marque sloop, bound from Rhode Island to Cape François, with a cargo of provisions, to purchase gunpowder, mounted with four carriage and 12 swivel guns, and 14 men. She hoisted Provincial colours, and ordered me to come on board in my boat, and bring my ship's papers and letters with me, or they would sink me. This I complied with, and then he sent a prize-master on board to take the command of my ship, and ordered him to keep him company. The next day my mate proposed to my ship's company not to work the ship, which they agreed to; the Captain made use of threats and promises, which had no effect on them; after many altercations, the Captain of the armed sloop, not having men capable of working or navigating my ship, he on the second day ordered me to go on board my ship, and permitted me to proceed on my voyage, and this morning I arrived in the port of Bristol.
> Mag. Miller.[1]

It was reported yesterday that advice was received that Commodore Hopkins, with his squadron, consisting of nine ships, was seen within three leagues of St. Kitts, and that it feared he intended to pay that island a visit.[2]

Postscript.

London.

Advice is just received, that the following ships are taken by the Provincial privateers, viz. the James, Littledale, and Norfolk, Grindal, of Whitehaven; the Henry and Esther, Helles, and Stakesby, Watt, of London.[3]

Accounts received from on board his Majesty's ship Glasgow, say, that during the engagement with Hopkins, nothing could be supposed fiercer than it was. Hopkins's ships were full of men, and had they been under proper command, and exercized as in the King's service, it would have been next to a miracle for the Glasgow to have escaped. She had two ports beat into one, her masts wounded, her sails and rigging cut almost to pieces, yet she made shift to fight against, and get clear from, six vessels, who had above 600 men, and 104 guns, whilst the poor Glasgow had but 24 guns, and 125 men. Captain [Tyringham] Howe, (no relation to Lord Howe) who commanded her, has gained great credit by the affair.

1. The American was probably the armed sloop Joseph, Captain James Munro, which cleared Providence for Hispaniola, on April 20, 1776.

"Extract of a Letter from Portsmouth, June 10."[1]

Capt. [John] Boyle, in the Hunter sloop of war, is arrived here; he sailed from Quebec the 16th ult. and says, the Surprize arrived there the 6th of May, with the Isis, and several other ships, at the sight of which the Rebels immediately raised the siege, leaving behind them 20 pieces of cannon, 6 mortars, &c. The Hunter met the transports, having on board General Burgoyne and the Brunswic troops, in the river St. Laurence; so that, he says, there is no doubt but by this time the Rebels are entirely drove out of all Canada.

My lord, London, 11 June 1776

Information received from Canada is becoming clearer. An officer, dispatched from Quebec on the 16th of last month on board the Corvette Hunter, brought yesterday letters from General Carleton dated on the 14th of the same month. They indicated that, upon the arrival of the first reinforcement brought by the ship Isis and a few Frigates or transport Ships, the Americans, numbering about three thousand, had decided to raise the siege on the 6th of last month. They abandoned their artillery and war ammunition. The Garrison made a sortie on the same day, the 6th of

May. However, this detachment must not have got too close to the retreating Americans since there was not a single man killed, wounded or made prisoner.

The essential thing is that Quebec is safe. On the 21st, the Corvette Hunter met the English troops and those from Brunswick under the Command of General Burgoyne sailing up the St. Lawrence. Counting this reinforcement and what may be obtained from Canada, General Carleton will soon be at the head of about ten thousand men in order to march on Montreal and attack the Lakes. It is assumed that the Americans will dispute every inch of the passage. General Burgoyne has with him 20 boats suitable for this expedition. They only need to be assembled and have the guns mounted. But a great number of other boats will be required to carry the troops, and it is expected that this expedition, subject to a number of difficulties, will require a considerable amount of time, even if we assume that it will be successful.

We have no confirmation concerning the capture of General Lee. We only know that badly needed arms and ammunition arrived in Virginia. As you can imagine, My lord, people say that we have sent them. But it matters little where the Americans obtained them as long as they have them.

From Halifax, we have reliable intelligence that General Howe's Army is in miserable condition. A number of the troops have to remain on board for lack of lodging ashore. The soldiers are suffering of dysentery and were on half-allowance until the arrival of the supply-ships which had fortunately reached Halifax before the departure of the Frigate Glasgow arrived on the 5th at Plymouth and which brought this news.

If General Howe's Army can not find billets in Halifax, it will be even worse off after the arrival of the Hessian troops; thus it can be expected that this Officer will hurry and begin operations in some more bountiful Province either by landing in Jersey or by making another attempt upon New York. Two of the ships which had left Boston with him fell into the hands of the Americans. One of them had a cargo of cloth exported from England and valued at thirty thousand pounds Sterling.[2]

The report made by the crew of the Frigate Glasgow on her fight against part of M. Hopkins' Squadron is quite different from the relation published in the Gazette of London. According to the information received from our correspondent in Plymouth who has it from the members of the crew themselves, the American Privateers attempted to board her several times, and she was able to get clear only by cutting off part of her stern, mounting a gun there and fighting her retreat. She only lost one man because the fire of the Americans was constantly directed at her rigging and her sails which were torn to pieces, as well as her masts which were badly damaged and delayed her passage greatly. Our Correspondent adds that she would have certainly been captured if other ships had not appeared during the pursuit. The Privateers had hoisted a Blood ensign and nailed it to the mast to show that they would not surrender. Hopkins himself did not want to get too deeply into the action because he carried an enormous quantity of powder which had to be saved at all cost.[3] In addition, he brought back 200 pieces of cannon which he landed in the Province of Connecticut, and captured prize after prize on his way. It is even reported that he took a bomb-galiot.[4]

You know, My lord, that until now the Americans cruised only against the transport ships belonging to the Government, but since Congress received the Prohibition Act which authorizes the seizure of all American Ships, it authorized in return the capture of any English Ship wherever they may be encountered, except those which would bring war ammunition to the Colonies. This bait should cause the Privateers to multiply and should be detrimental to the trade of Great Britain in the West Indies.[5]

Through a resolution on the 6th of April, Congress has opened the Ports of the Thirteen United Colonies to Goods and Ships from all Nations. The only item not included is tea; the only Nation not included is Great Britain. This resolution, although it may arouse the speculations on the part of other trading Powers, especially those which have a great deal of natural resources and industry, would undoubtedly be of more value if it had been accompanied by the capture of Quebec; because, in order to trade with America, the latter must be independent, and it will become independent only through success on the battlefield. Among the resolutions carried on the same date, we find one which forbids the importation of slaves. If it is put into effect it augurs a sharp decrease in the crops of rice and tobacco.[6]

London Gazette, SATURDAY, JUNE 8 TO TUESDAY, JUNE 11, 1776

Admiralty-Office [London], June 11, 1776.

By Letters from Captain [Charles] Douglas, of His Majesty's Ship the Isis, dated Quebec the 8th and 15th of May, received Yesterday by Captain [John] Hamilton, late of the Lizard, who arrived from thence in his Majesty's Sloop the Hunter, it appears that the Isis, which sailed from Portland on the 11th of March, having Succours on Board for the Relief of the Place, made the Island of St. Peter's on the 11th of April; that he had from thence with the greatest Difficulty, made his Way, pressing the Ship, by Force of Sail for Fifty or Sixty Leagues through large Fields of thick Ice; that on the 21st of April, when he got clear of the Ice, he made the island of Anticostie, and the same Evening entered the River St. Lawrence; that on the 30th he anchored in a Snow Storm near the Pilgrim Islands, and from thence, as the Storm cleared up, observed successive Smoaks from Cape to Cape, towards Quebec; and that, after various Obstacles from Fogs, Calms, or contrary Winds, he arrived on the 3d of May near Isle aux Coudres, where he was joined by His Majesty's Ship the Surprise, and Martin Sloop, which sailed on the 20th of March from Plymouth, having likewise Succours on Board. Captain Douglas adds, that having secured here all the French Pilots, and every Hour becoming more and more precious, he gave Orders on the 5th of May to Captain [Robert] Linzee, of the Surprise, to make the best of his Way, and give Notice to Governor Carleton of the approaching Relief. Captain Linzee arrived in View of the Town at six o'Clock the next Morning; and after answering the private Signals from the Garrison, came to an Anchor in the Basin of Quebec, between the Rebel-battery on Point Levi and the Lower Town, where the Isis and Martin came to an Anchor also, very soon after; and the several Detachments they had on Board were immediately landed. Captain Douglas further observes, that the General wisely availing himself of the different Impressions which the Arrival of the Ships had made on the Minds of the Rebels, marched out to give them Battle, but that they as instantly retreated; on which Captain Douglas ordered Captain Linzee and Captain [Henry] Harvey, of the Martin Sloop, with a Province Armed Vessel, to proceed up the River as far as the Rapids, in Hopes to annoy them in their Retreat, which was attended with good Effect, as it hindered the Parties on the opposite Sides of the River from joining in their Flight towards Montreal. He represents their Flight to have been very precipitate, as they left not only their Cannon undischarged, their Ammunition, Scaling Ladders, Intrenching Tools, and Provisions, but even many of them their Muskets.

The Surprise and Martin were farther successful in taking an Armed Schooner belonging to the Rebels, carrying Four 6 Pounders and Six 3 Pounders, but the Men escaped into the Woods, they also recovered His Majesty's Schooner the Gaspe, which in the last Winter, had fallen into the Hands of the Rebels, and had been sunk by them, but was soon weighed and found to be not materially damaged. It also appears, from Captain Douglas's Letters, that on the 8th of May His Majesty's ship Niger arrived with Three Transports, having on Board the 47th Regiment, from Halifax; and that on the 10th, Captain [Skeffington] Lutwidge, of His Majesty's Ship the Triton, arrived with the Lord Howe and Bute Transports, having Troops on Board, together with the British Queen, Agnes and Beaver, Victuallers from England.

Captain Douglas speaks highly in Commendation of the Captains and Officers of the Ships employed to carry Succours, for their Perseverance and Exertion in the many Difficulties they had to encounter in the Passage through the Gulph, and in every other Part of the Service.

M. DE LOMBARD TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE[1]

My lord, In conformity with the instructions you sent to M. de la Porte in your dispatch of 31 May last, I fruitlessly made the most rigorous investigation in order to discover the Dutch ships which sailed recently from Amsterdam with a cargo of 40 thousand pounds of gunpowder destined for New England according to the English Minister Plenipotentiary.

Since the instructions which you had sent previously to this port, we took scrupulous care in order to prevent any ship from New England to take on war supplies of any kind. I shall be twice as careful in this matter and I shall keep a watchful eye on the destination of gunpowder which might be brought here by Dutch ships. I have the honor to be &ca.

Paris, 12 June 1776

I have the honor, Sir, to send you the reply which I received from the Navy Commissioner in Nantes concerning 45 thousand pounds of powder which recently left Amsterdam and which the Court of London believes to be destined to New England. However, you will see that M. Doyard does not believe it was part of the shipments received in this port during the month of May and that he will take great care to see that none is embarked for a foreign destination, as well as any war ammunition. I have the honor to be with sincere attachment, Sir, [&c.]

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM WHITEHAVEN, JUNE 14."[1]

On Monday morning arrived here a schooner, which sailed the 14th of May from Squam (it is a creek on the N.E. side of Cape Ann, a few leagues from Boston) commanded by Captains [William] Wood and [John] Robinson, whose ships, the Jenny and Nelly, were taken by the Provincials; as were also the James, [William] Littledale; the Norfolk, [Jonathan] Grindall; and the Happy Return, [James] Hall, all of this port. The above schooner was purchased by the Captains who came home in her jointly, with Capt. Littledale and Capt. Nellis, of the Henry and Esther, of Whitby, who, with their people, being prisoners, had obtained leave to depart the continent, and take their passage for Great Britain.

This being granted, and the provisions laid in for the people, as they amounted to forty-eight, some disagreeable accounts coming to the Provincials they unbent the sails and took away her rigging, till they gave further permission. During this and sailing Capt. Littledale, Capt. Nellis, and a Mr. Wilson, who were coming home with them, were drowned by the boat oversetting in going on shore from the vessel. The schooner sailed the Monday following this accident, and off the banks of Newfoundland was boarded by his Majesty's ship the Centurion, Capt. Braithwaite [Richard Brathwaite], who pressed eleven hands out of her, his ship's company being then eighty short of complement.

When the schooner left Squam, upwards of thirty vessels were upon the stocks at Newbury, among which were one of 24 and another of 36 guns; one of 36 was launched a few days before a little to the northward of Newbury.[2] Ships, they were informed, were arriving there daily from Bilboa with gunpowder and military stores. The men of war sometimes pursue them to the mouth of the river, at the entrance of which there is a very bad bar, about three miles from the town. Numbers of people were employed at Newbury making saltpetre, of which one man will, with indifferent materials, make a pound a day.

[Extract] Versailles, 15 June 1776

There can be no better way of showing to the King of England our desire to perpetuate the good intelligence which exists than that of presenting to him the actions of subordinates which might disturb it. The English cruisers take certain liberties which might determine commitments against the wishes and will of the two Courts. I believe that it was not in a manner of reproach that Lord Suffolk mentioned to you the war ammunition which the Americans may have obtained from our islands, and that he does not wish to use it as an argument in order to justify the acts of carelessness on the part of their sailors who took it upon themselves to make incursions into our roads and under our guns. The English have encouraged illicit traffic as long as it was convenient for them, and they would like to stop it now that it has turned to their disadvantage; but greed will always be stronger than caution and human laws. We had a good example of this during the disorders in Corsica. The English merchants brought arms and war ammunition there with much publicity. We always understood that they were private and independent ventures, loathsome even to the Government. The King would be displeased to see his subjects taking the liberty to bring any form of offensive assistance to the Americans, and if they were caught by English ships in this illicit traffic they could expect no support nor help from us. However, I cannot help but note that Lord Suffolk, while mentioning their numerous cruises, gave us to understand that they also watched those of our ships which sail to and from our islands and carry arms and other war ammunition on board. But there is an essential difference which you will please to mark to the English Minister. I can conceive that vessels coming out of the Bahama strait on pretext of returning to Europe with rather large quantities of contraband may be presumed to deal in illicit traffic and be suspect enough to be stopped and subjected to the loss of their cargo, but I cannot understand on what grounds one could take the liberty to limit our direct trade with our islands, whatever the nature of the cargoes may be. What England considers as contraband in the present circumstances is quite legal from one French possession to another French possession, and I remain convinced that if this matter were taken to any English tribunal, its decision would be favorable to us, but we cannot rely upon the wisdom of the British Government and believe that it would raise such a delicate question. Furthermore, the sea is free and we do not stand opposed to the British if they seize the American ships, even those which would sail under our flag, and prevent them from reaching our ports and returning to theirs; but our territorial waters must remain a sacred shelter for them.

I find easier to believe the disasters which General Arnold is said to have suffered before Quebec and which forced him to raise the siege than the arrival of the ship Isis which is said to have anchored at this place on 19 April; there is no previous example to the effect that the St. Lawrence is navigable before the end even of the month of May.[2]

2. Even though the April 19 date was in error, Vergennes was wrong in his surmise, as the Isis arrived early in May.

[Corunna] 15th June 1776.

Several masters of American vessels, in order to deceive His Majesty's ships of war, have of late made fictitious sales of their ships to British and Irish merchants established in this kingdom, and thereby continue their navigation with safety. An Irish merchant established at Ferrol acquainted me last week that he had made a purchase of the ship, the King of Prussia, of 300 tons burthen, belonging to Philadelphia,[2] and desired me to indorse the ship's Register to him, but suspecting the identity [sic authenticity] of the sale, I refused to do it, notwithstanding the offers that were made me, unless both the purchaser and captain would positively swear that no foreigner or inhabitant of the Colonies in rebellion held or retained any part, share or interest therein, with which they have not thought proper to comply.

Orders to Captain de Monteil, La Renommée[1]

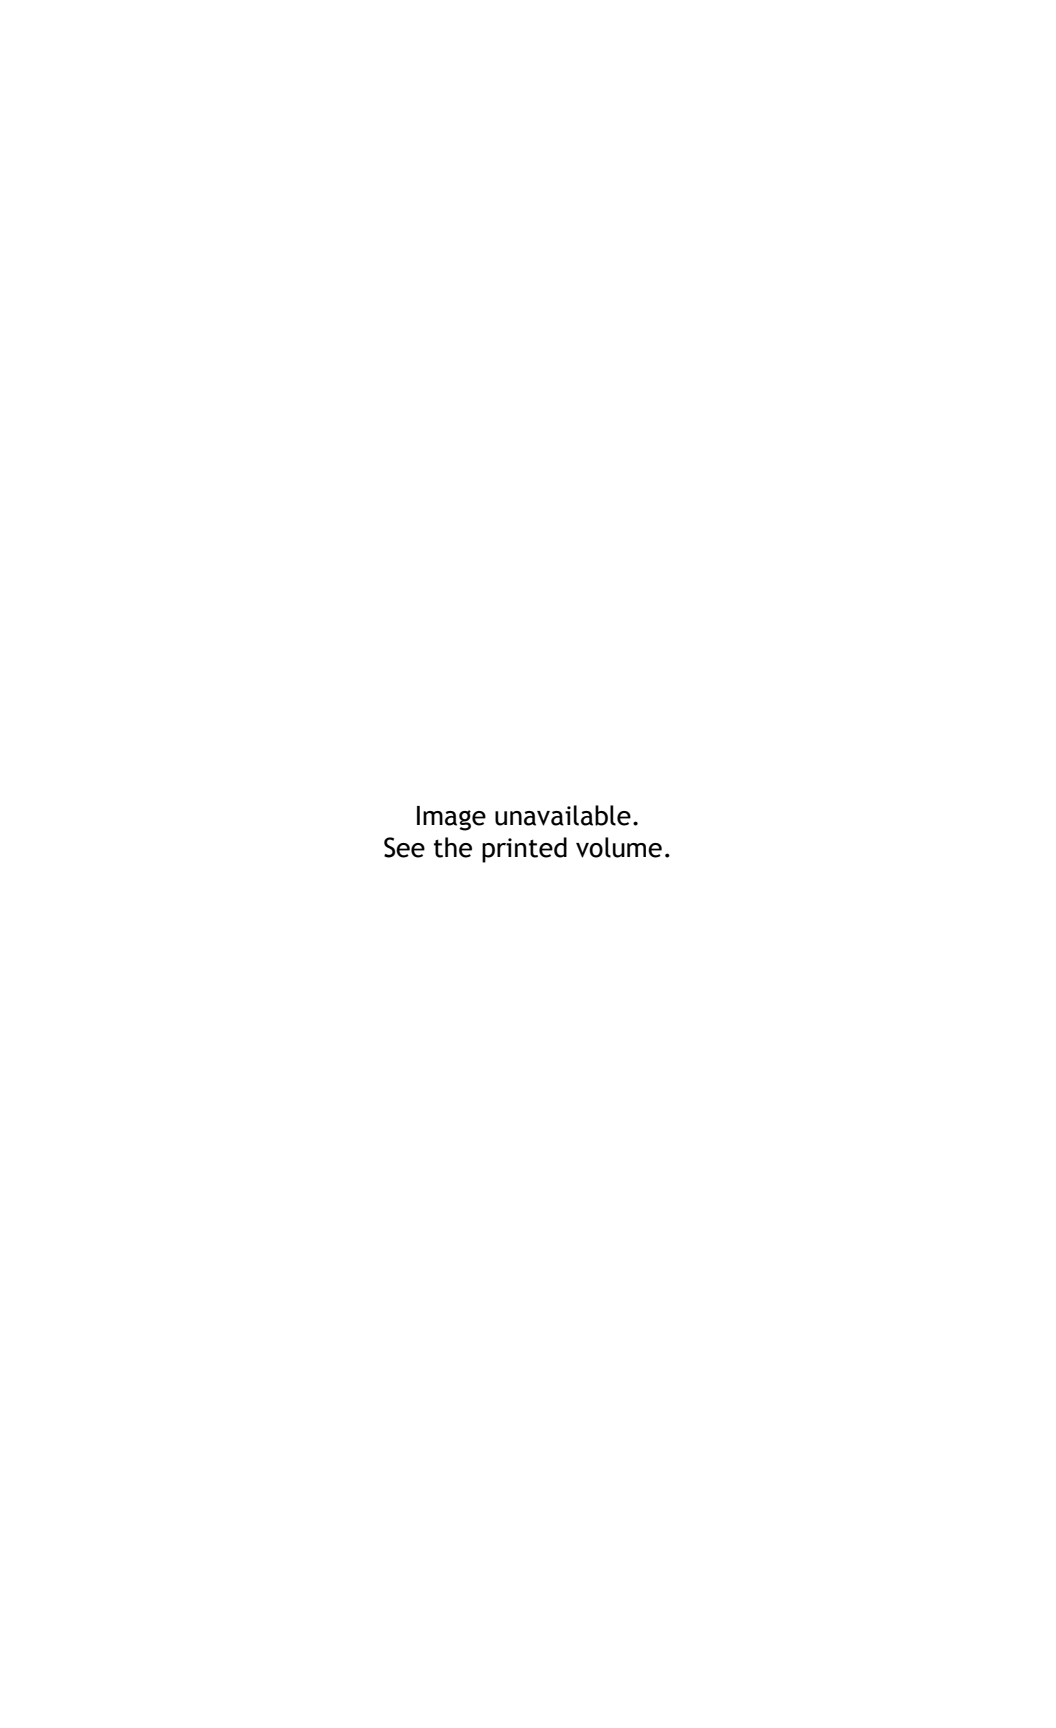
[Extract] Marly, 17 June 1776

His Majesty having decided that the Frigate la Renommée will cruise off the coast of St. Domingue, he issues these particular instructions to Captain de Monteil in order to acquaint him with the nature of his mission and the line of conduct he will maintain with respect to the command of his frigate, his Crew, the victuals and the salutes.

As soon as the said frigate is ready and the winds are favorable, M. de Monteil is to get under way and leave the road of Brest. . . .



Upon his arrival at Port au Prince, he will communicate the present Instructions to the Commandant of the Colony and M. de Vaivren, Intendant, and he will comply with the orders contained in his particular Instructions relative to his operations and his cruise while he will be stationed in this Colony.

One of the main objects of M. de Monteil's mission during his cruise is to stop the trade which foreigners might try to carry in to St. Domingue. In this end, His Majesty orders him to remain constantly at sea and to put into ports and roads only when he will receive special orders in writing from the said Commandant a copy of which he will send to the Secretary of State in charge of the department of the Navy upon his return in order to establish the length of his calls as well as the extraordinary expenses which they may have caused. . . .

The campaign of the frigate la Renommée will last seven months as of the date of her departure from Brest. . . .

He will salute all the ships of the crowned heads flying our flag or some other mark senior to his. However, he will not salute English ships regardless of their flag and he will not request to be saluted by them; he will act likewise if he has to put into the places and dominions of the King of England.

DR. BARBEU DUBOURG TO VERGENNES[1]

Monseigneur Paris 19th June 1776

I have this morning seen M. de Gribauval,[2] who, interesting himself much in the fate of our friends in America, into whose secrets he has been initiated by the Count de St Germain, is very uneasy on their account because of the advance of the English by way of Canada. He fears lest they may be forced to bend beneath the yoke of the Mother Country if they are not promptly and efficiently succoured. Consequently, having meditated thereon, he thinks it would be very possible to transmit to them what they need the most urgently in order to make a stand against their enemies; and he is persuaded that I would experience little or no difficulty therein on the part of the Minister for War provided I found some source elsewhere to furnish the expenses of transport. There are in the Royal arsenals more than 300 or 400 pieces of cannon of No. 4 calibre, (the most necessary in their position) not at present in use for the service of the State, which could be sold to Spain to be forwarded to Havanna, and which any merchants would purchase at Havanna for the neighbouring Continent. It would only be a question of filing off the fleurs de lys or double L's. They would soon be replaced by new castings, and the merchants would send over for their discharge as soon as possible a sufficient, or more than sufficient, amount of produce of the new Continent, as for instance 4 or 5 millions of tobacco the sale of which is assured beforehand by my arrangements with the Farmers General. He wished then that I would make the application for them at once to the Count de St. Germain, not being able for his part to undertake more than to support it well. Not having the honour to be known to that gentleman I have no hope but in your goodness, Monseigneur, — if you would condescend to inform him of it in order that I might gain admission to present to him my humble petition upon this subject, we could find means to smooth away all difficulties; we should not want for officers for the service of this artillery; M. de Gribauval, already authorized to grant leave for this service, would choose them himself; and I do not believe M. Penet so destitute of means as not to furnish with ease all the unforeseen expenses. I shall write to him tomorrow. I have the honour to be with the most profound respect Monseigneur [&c.]

"REMARKS ON THE STATE OF HIS MAJESTY'S FLEET"[1]

June 20th 1776.

We have now 29 Ships of the Line compleatly fitted as Guardships, which, with the aid of a Press, might be all at sea in a Fortnight.

There is one additional Guardship of 74 Guns ordered to be got ready to receive Men.

All our Frigates (that do not want considerable repair) including Ships of 50 Guns, and Two of 64, are in America, or appropriated for the American Service, so that we have nothing left for our Home Stations except 2 Frigates of 32 Guns, 8 Sloops, & 9 Cutters; These, together with 20 Tenders, will be disposed of to the best advantage for raising voluntier Seamen, and for beginning a Press whenever that Measure is found necessary; and for the same purpose we have Rendezvouz's with proper Officers in 20 of the Out Ports, besides a Regulating Captain & several Lieutenants under him in the Port of London.

Besides these Vessels stationd at home, there will seldom be less than 5 or 6 Frigates in England fitting out for America, or of those that from time to time will be coming home to refit

I suppose we have above 30,000 Men now employed, of which, about 15,000 on the American Service, 8,000 at home, and the rest on the several foreign Stations.

In case of a War 20 Ships of the Line may be depended upon as ready for Sea (if there is no difficulty about getting Men) within a Year from the time of their receiving Orders to fit out; but it must be observed that it will usually require a Month to prepare each Ship for receiving Men, and at least two Months more before she will be manned and ready for Sea.

What I would propose should be done, in case upon consideration it is judged that the French & Spanish Equipments deserve our immediate attention, is, first, to order one additional Guardship to be commissioned at each Port, which, if the Asia of 64 Guns returns from America this Year, will make 24 Line of Battle Ships ready for Sea.

I would give immediate Orders for 12 Line of Battle Ships more to be got in readiness to receive Men, which would put them in the State we suppose the Fleet at Brest now to be in, as far as the preparation of the Ships in the Dock Yards; for it is to be apprehended that they can raise Seamen to a certain number much faster than we can.

The Workmen in the Yards to be allowed to work double Tides

The Marines to be augmented from 90 to 100 private per Company.

To go on raising Voluntier Seamen.

To prepare measures for a Press with Secrecy that it may be carried suddenly & effectually into execution, in case the Answers & intelligence we receive from Foreign Courts are not satisfactory.

It must be observed that by these preparations we shall considerably exceed the Number of Seamen voted, and incur a large expence in fitting the Ships.[2]

1. Fortescue, ed., Correspondence of George III, III, 378–80.
2. Ibid., 380, this statement and proposals, apparently prepared at the Admiralty, were presented and acted upon at a Cabinet meeting the same day.

British Intelligence Regarding French and Spanish Naval Preparations[1]

20th June 1776

By the Advices from Rotterdam and other Intelligence received, it appears

That the French have now at Sea a Squadron consisting of

1 Ship of 74 Guns
2 ---------- 64
6 Frigates
6 Sloops &
2 Cutters.

manned as in time of War

That orders are sent to Brest de pourvoir a leur besoin, or, to forward, so as that they may be ready to sail in 15 days after receiving the definitive Orders from Court,

1 Ship of 90 Guns
3 ---------- 80
7 ---------- 74
1 ---------- 70
7 ---------- 64
2 ---------- 50
11 Frigates from 32 to 26 Guns

That 2,000 Workmen of one sort or another are expected at Brest.

That 4000 Sailors are ordered for that Department, and are daily passing thither.

That Orders are also sent to Rochfort & Toulon to visit all the Ships & Frigates at those Ports, & to put such of them as are good, into a condition to be armed; to which end they work without intermission at the last mentioned Port, the number of Workmen there being also increased, particularly in Ropemakers & Coopers, and the Bakers kept fully employed.

It also appears that orders have been given for fitting out at Brest Rochfort & L'Orient for the East Indies and that one of the ships of 64 Guns & the two Frigates are actually sailed for the Isle of France with Troops, a great quantity of Bomb Shells, Shot, Powder & on board.

2 Ships of 64 Guns
1 ---------- 56 &
2 Frigates

And it farther appears that Reinforcements have been sent this Year to their West India Islands, which, with the Troops that were already there, amount to about 7000 Men.

With respect to the Spanish Equipments it appears, about the latter end of April,

That they expected at Cadiz 10 Ships of the Line and 4 Frigates from Ferrol

That officers & Petty officers were to be sent from Cadiz to Ferrol towards manning those Ships and Frigates.

That on the 8th of May 2 Ships of the Line sailed from Cadiz with the Flota

That an Edict has been published for all the Registered Seamen to appear at the proper Office in three days under pain of death.

That on the 20th of May a Squadron sailed from Cadiz under the command of a Rear Admiral, consisting of

5 Ships of 70 Guns
2 Frigates of 26.
2 Sloops of 10
1 Xebeck of 30

the destination of which was kept secret,

That there remained in the Bay of Cadiz

2 Ships of 70 Guns
1 Frigate of 26.

That Orders are sent to Ferrol to hold all the Ships there in readiness to be armed, if there should be occasion for it, & that the Cadiz Squadron is to be increased to 15 Ships of the Line, besides Frigates.

It also appears they are preparing at Barcelona a number of Tents, a great Train of Artillery, Baggage Waggons & all sorts of Necessaries.

By these Intelligences it appears that France & Spain have, or will soon have a larger number of Ships in Commission in Europe than we have, and that they may have double the number unless we immediately take proper measures to keep pace with them in our Equipments.

It was yesterday reported in the city, that Commodore Hopkins, with nine ships under his command, had landed in the island of Bermudas, and carried off all the valuable goods he could meet with whilst he staid, which was three days.[1]

1. While this report was without foundation, it illustrates the uneasiness created in London by news of Hopkins' amphibious assault on New Providence. The Public Advertiser, July 29, 1776, carried another: "a British fleet was totally defeated by Admiral Hopkins upon the 23d of June, after a dreadful slaughter on both sides."

ARTHUR LEE TO BEAUMARCHAIS[1]

No 4. London June 21st 1776

In Cyphers

The Army of England in America consists of forty thousand Men and their fleet of one hundred Ships, of which but two are of seventy four Guns. Their Officers both by Sea and Land, and Engineers are good; they are well supplied with Artillery and Stores. Consider then, Sir, how diffucult it will be for the Americans to resist such forces, "if they are not assisted by France with Officers, "Engineers and large Ships of War." You may send them out without the least risque. Ten French Ships of War dispatched secretly to the Cape or Martinico, and joined with the American Fleet might scour the American Coast, and destroy the whole English fleet, dispursed as it is at present, On which the land Army deprived of succour would be easily defeated. And by this shock the English Marine would be mortally wounded. Do you fear that this will kindle a War between the two Nations? But how will England be able to support a War without Fleets, without Colonies, without Seamen, and without resources? On the contrary, if you suffer America to fall again under the dominion of England, the latter will for ever be invincible.

[Extract] Marly, 21 June 1776

Already some time ago, Sir, I told you that the English Ministers form conjectures about what we do from what they themselves would do if they were in our place, and they are convinced that any form of assistance received by the Americans comes from France. I shall not deny that some help may come from France. Our merchants like to make money as well as those of other nations; and I am sure that the English merchants themselves do not fail to act likewise in spite of the much stricter prohibitions to which they must be subjected. Furthermore, there is no such thing as contraband on land, everything there is merchandise. Only at sea, and according to its destination, may a certain merchandise be called contraband. We do not protect those who carry it; we do not stand against the English if they seize them; we would not protect any French subject who would be caught in this illicit traffic, with the exception of course of their passage from France to our islands, or any port under the sovereignty of the King. I have made myself sufficiently clear with respect to all this in my last dispatch, Sir. Furthermore, if the English fear that the Americans obtain assistance from us by way of trade, our market is open to them as well as the others. Whoever can pay the most can be assured of the preference.

I have seen the resolution passed by Congress on the 6th of April last to open the ports of the thirteen united Colonies to the vessels and merchandise from all nations, with the exception of the English and tea. I do not believe that there will be many people interested in this venture: the risks outweigh any possible advantages since it is most probable that the English who have not yet recognized the independence of America would seize indiscriminately any vessel entering or leaving American ports on pretext of illicit trade. Something else seems to require more attention: it is the order issued by Congress to its ship-owners to chase indiscriminately all English vessels in all parts of the world. The desire to make captures more easily may attract Privateers in the European seas where the English are less on their guard and it will be rather embarassing to decide what to do if they want to send their prizes to our ports for security. With respect to all civilised nations, the Americans to this day are only in a state of open rebellion against their legitimate master. This does not keep them from finding shelter in our ports for themselves, their ships and their goods; we continue to consider them as English subjects and we let them enjoy all the rights attached to this quality; but in what light shall we look upon the prizes they will most certainly capture if these are claimed? Since it is most likely that this probable contingency has already been the object of reflections on the part of the English, you will please to inform me of any sensible or reasonable comments you may hear on this subject. . .

M. de St. Paul is worrying again; he sees fleets being armed in our ports as well as everything which his imagination, exalted by nature, may suggest to him. Nothing of the kind is taking place, we wish to be ready for any eventuality and our caution has no other purpose but that to assure our safety in all possible events.

PHILIP STEPHENS TO CAPTAIN CHARLES DOUGLAS, R. N.[1]

Sr 22 June 1776.

I recd on the 10th Inst by Capt Hamilton your Letters of the 8th & 15th of last Month; the former giving an Account of your arrival at Quebeck on the 6th in the Isis, together with the Surprize & Martin Sloop, after having forced with the utmost difficulty a passage through large fields of Ice, & of the happy consequences which attended it; the latter acquainting their Lordships with the arrival of the Triton & Niger with several Transports & Victuallers & of your proceedings since the raising the Seige of Quebeck; And having laid your said Letters before my Lords Commrs of the Admty, I have it in command from them to acquaint you, that they cannot too much approve of the indefatigable zeal & the diligence with which you & the rest of the Captains of His Majts Ships & Vessels pursued & effected so difficult a passage with such Credit to yourselves & advantage to your King & Country. This you will take care to make known to them.

Their Lordships have the highest satisfaction in the Accots they have received of the meritorious Service of the Navy Battalion formed by Capt Hamilton, and intending to appoint him to the command of a Ship at home, have signed a Commission for Capt Mackenzie to be Capt of the Lizard, as also one for Lieut Boyle of the Isis, who brought the Hunter to England, to be Commander of her in the room of Captain Mackenzie. Their Lordships have likewise signed Commissions for Lieuts. McEvoy and Berkeley to be 1st & 2d Lts of the Isis, and Mr Butler, late master, to be 3d Lieut of her; And my Lords intending also to provide for Mr [William] Fooks 1st Lt & Mr John Thompson Master's Mate, of the Lizard, at home; I am to signify their Lordships direction to you to send them to England by the first opportunity, and to acquaint you, that they have signed Commissions for Lts Macclellan to succeed Mr Fooks & for Mr Starke, who had been ordered by Capt Hamilton to act as Lieut of the Lizard, to be 2d Lieut of her in the room of Lieut Macclellan, all which Commissions, except Capt Boyles, will be sent to you by this conveyance, to be delivered to the Persons for whom they are respectively designed.

My Lords understanding, by your last Letter, that Genl Carlton is desirous that Mr Starke should command, as Lieut, the Schooner which has been taken from the Rebels, I am to acquaint you that they have authorized Vice Adml Lord Howe, Commr in Chief of His Majts Ships & Vessels in No America, to purchase the said Schooner for His Majesty, and have recommended it to his Lordship to appoint Lieut Starke to command her, and fill up the vacancy which will thereby be made in the Lizard.[2]

Their Lordships have promoted Lieut Nunn to the command of the Beaver Sloop & intend to send her out to him, with which they have acquainted Lord Howe, that he may appoint a Lieut to command the Magdalen Schor in his room.

Their Lordships have also promoted 2d Lieuts Brown & Strickland of the Marines, serving on board the Lizard, to 1st Lieutenantcies, which you will please to signify to them.

And, in consequence of what has been represented to the Earl of Sandwich by Genl Carlton, and by yourself in your last mentioned Letter, their Lordships will lay before His Majesty the Case of the several Officers of the Navy Battalion with respect to the Allowance of Pay they crave while they served on Shore.

I have nothing further in command from their Lordships but to acquaint you, that they cannot approve of your hoisting a broad pendant, much less of your appointing a Captain to serve under you in the Isis, and that if you have done so, it is their direction that you do immediately recall the Appointments you may have made upon that occasion. PHILIP STEPHENS TO VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE[1]

My Lord 23d June 1776

I have now the honor to acquaint your Lordship by direction of my Lords Commrs of the Admty that His Majts Ship the Repulse sail'd from Spithead on the 26th of last Month having under Convoy the Transports Storeships and Victuallers whose Names are in the List you will please to receive in this

The Diamond with the Lark Ambuscade & Unicorn have orders to proceed & take under Convoy the Transports which carry the 2d Division of Hessian Troops The Regt & Artillery of the Prince of Waldeck; the 16th Regt of Light Dragoons; the Remount Horse for the 17th; And the Draught Horses for the Baggage & Artillery of the army serving with Genl Howe; as also the Transports having 402 German Recruits on board. They take under Convoy likewise the Seven Victuallers named in the Margin loaded with Provisions for the use of the Fleet, and the whole will sail from Spithead as soon as the Wind permits: Three other Victuallers are daily expected. Vizt Northam, Edward & Adventure, And if they arrive in time will proceed with the same Convoy, as will three more Transports Vizt. John, Chambre, Susannah havg British Recruits on board for Genl Howe's Army, but this being uncertain the Convoy is ordered not to wait for them

My Lord having been informed by the Lord of the Treasury that there are a number of Victuallers at Cork laden with Provisions & Stores for the use of the aforementioned army they have directed Capt Jordan of the Galatea to repair thither, & taking them under Convoy proceed on the 1st of July to Halifax, where he is to leave the said Victuallers or proceed with them to such Port or place as he shall learn by directions, which it is expected he will find the Army is removed to.

Besides the Supplies in the Army Victuallers abovementioned my Lords have understood it is intended that the like shall be repeated at the expiration of every following 14 Days, or as near to that period as the same can be done; which it is thought fit I should intimate to your Lordship as you may expect Convoys will from time to time be appointed to see the Ships which carry such supplies safe to the place of destination.

The Second Division of the Brunswick Troops & the Hannan Artillery with a party of 447 German Recruits & a detachment of British Troops consisting of Six Officers & Sixty Private intended to join the Army serving in Canada being embarked, my Lords have ordered Capt Jacobs of the Amazon with the Garland to take the Transports which have the said Troops on board under Convoy to see them in safety to Quebec, with all such Storeships & Victuallers belonging to the Navy, victualling or the Ordnance Departments as may be destined to Canada.

Having now acquainted your Lordship with the Convoys which have sail'd, or that are ready to sail, since your departure from England I have only to add on this Subject that as soon as the said Services are performed the Captains of the several Ships aforementioned are ordered to join the Squadron under your command & follow your Orders for their further proceedings.

Their Lordships have thought fit to order His Majts Ships the Pembroke & Boulogne to be fitted to proceed to Halifax, where the former is to serve as a Sheer Hulk & the latter lay in the Harbour to be employ'd on such Services as she may be applicable to: And to be established whilst they serve as such with the Officers & Men as follows

Pembroke.	Boulogne
1 Boatswain & Servant	Do
1 Carpenter & Do	Do
40 Seamen	10
44	14
Guns 20 upper Deckers	Guns as opposite

And in order to assist in Navigating the said Ships there will be employed in them respectively the additional Officers & Men as under.

Pembroke	Boulogne
1 Lieut & Servant	1 Lieut & Servant
1 Clerk to Do	1 Clerk to Do
1 Master & Servant	1 Master & Servant
4 Petty Officers	4 Petty Officers
1 Surgeon & Servant	1 Surgeons Mate
1 Clerk & Servant	1 Cook & Servant
103 Seamen	54 Seamen
116	66

With respect to the additional Officers it is their Lordships directions that you send them to England by the first opportunity that may offer: But as to the Petty Officers & Seamen they leave it to your Lordship to dispose of them amongst the Ships under your command in such way as your Lordship shall find necessary with the others whom I shall have occasion to mention in a subsequent part of this Letter.

Their Lordships with a view to benefit the public all they can by the Service of these new Ships have directed the Navy Board to provide & send in them as many large Masts & other Stores as they can take in; And knowing from the representations before them of the State of Stores at Halifax, the very great advantage it must be to have the Magazines there replenished as largely, and in as short time as is possible, they have further directed them to take up two Storeships of about 300 Tons each & load them with the utmost expedition with every assortment proper for the use of a Fleet, & which they hope may be in readiness to sail by the middle of August next.

By means of these; and the Supplies which are likewise ordered to be sent to Antigua & Jamaica for the refitting such Ships & Vessels as you may send to those places for that purpose, their Lordships hope the Service so far as respects the supplying the Fleet with Stores, will be effectually answered & the Ships thereby kept in continued employ

Vice Adml Shuldham representing in his last Letters, as Vice Adml Graves had done before, the want of ordnance Stores for supplying the Fleet at Halifax & the same was signified to the Master Genl of the Ordnance, & having received an Answer thereto I sent your Lordship a Copy thereof for your information on this Subject, desiring at the same time to refer you to a Letter to Mr Shuldham of the 27th March Copy of which was given to your Lordship, by which you will observe that every thing in their Lordships power respecting the Ordnance Articles has been duly attended to

Mr Shuldham having also taken Notice in his Letters that some of the Ships are short in their Complements of Marines; Their Lordships command me to acquaint you that it is their intention to send out Marines to compleat the respective Ships Complements so soon as the numbers at Quarters will enable them to do so.

Their Lordships upon reviewing the Complements of such of the Schooners, & other small Vessels, which at present bear 30 Men only; reflecting also upon the Services to be expected from those Vessels, think it may be of advantage to have their Complements encreased to Forty Men each, they therefore, if your Lordship shall coincide in opinion with them herein, command me to authorize you to increase their Complements accordingly.

Lord Geo Germaine having transmitted to my Lords the extract of a Letter his Lordship has written to Genl Carleton & to Genl Howe respecting the return to England of such Transports as can be spared from the Services of the Armies under their respective commands, I send you by their directions a Copy of the said Extract & am to recommend it to your Lordship to do every thing in your power toward carrying Lord George's directions into execution: and for your further information your Lordship will receive also a Copy of my Letter on this Subject to the Senior Officer in the River St Laurence with a Copy of the Order therein referr'd to their Lordships wishing in a matter so very important as this is, that you may see the same in its fullest light. What more I have to observe is their Lordships desire that in sending home such of the British Transports as can be spared your Lordship do give preference to those which have been longest abroad and are most in want of refitting.

Mr Shuldham has very strongly stated to their Lordships the distress that may attend his Majestys Ships Stationed in No America, from the impossibility of procuring Men to keep up their respective Complements: but they hope from the great number of American Ships lately taken on that Coast, his apprehensions on that head have been obviated, as by Virtue of the prohibitory Act a power is given for putting the Crews of Prizes on board His Majestys Ships where they are to be considered as much in the Service of His Majesty as if they had enter'd into it voluntarily: Which their Lordships doubt not you will observe, & comply with, as far as necessary to compleat the Complements of Ships which may be deficient – Nor can they doubt in your Lordship's doing this but you will Order a preference to be given to those Men who are Natives of Great Britain or Ireland should the number that may be taken be more than enough to compleat the Complements of the Kings Ships as aforementioned, it may be proper to send the overplus to England, as opportunities offer of Ships returning, in lieu of the Marines, which may be left to do Duty with the Battalion on Shore; But if in the event the number of Men taken in Prizes shall be more than can be disposed of in the modes above provided for, and by their increase they should become inconvenient, My Lords Command me to say, that under such a circumstance they see no impropriety in your ordering such Men to be set on Shore in any part of America Your Lordship shall approve of

However their Lordships not chusing to trust too far to those Supplies which may arise from Men procured from prizes have besides the Men put on board to assist in Navigating the Pembroke & Boulogne ordered one Hundred Landsmen to be sent out in the numbers, and on board the Ships mentioned in the Margin to be disposed of in the Ships Your Lordship may think fit,

Ambuscade 20
Lark 20
Amazon 20

and by which their Lordships hope the Ships will be completed with such Men as may be confided in.—

The Glasgow which was sent to England to repair the damages she received in Action with five Rebell Cruizers, being arrived at Plymouth, And the Hunter which came with Dispatches from Quebec being arrived at Portsmouth, My Lords have order'd them to be immediately Refitted & so soon as the same is done they will be returned to serve as part of the Fleet under your Lordships command &c P S

My lord, London, 24 June 1776

When we consider the forces of a Nation we ordinarily distinguish her own from those she derives from her alliances. The combination of these means is the measure of her power and determines to what degree she may impress rival nations. I doubt that, if England considers us under both these views, she will find the balance to tip in her favor. But I shall leave these speculations to her competence. I shall limit myself to look for her interest, her views, her means, her undertakings. Today I propose, My lord, to call to your attention the condition of her forces.

When considering the political situation of England, we find this Power to be without system, without liaison, without purpose, and almost without any influence on the Continent, with the exception of Portugal whose alliance, useful to her trade in time of peace, would be a burden in time of war. We see her fighting the difficulty of governing far away possessions with eccentric agitation, while the different parts of her empire act upon one another in order to destroy one another.

If, from there, we look over her means, we find from the progress of the present war that everything points to the insufficient resources of England in men and money in order to sustain a prolonged war at sea. The extraordinary inducements for the levy of sailors, the permission to use foreigners on merchant ships, the quality of military crews where real sailors are in proportion of less than 1 to 3 do not indicate a superabundance of means in this area. On shore, the difficulty of finding recruits due to a shortage of men which was openly confessed in Parliament by the Secretary of War, compels this Power to import foreign troops at great expense; the impossibility to face such an expensive undertaking even by using all her revenue places her in such a position that she must increase taxes and issue new Government bonds. Such behavior should surprise rather than alarm the rival powers of England, especially when we observe that her use of the resources which she exhausts, or the charges which she multiplies can only bring about the ruin of the country from which this country pretends to draw the bulk of her commerce by open force.

Following this survey, there remains for us to consider more especially the present state of her forces at sea as well as on land. This is the subject of the tables No 1 and No 2.[2] The first one will interest you more since England is detached from the Continent not only by her policy but also by her geographic situation and can be considered only as a maritime Power divided over several parts of the world and of which the real center is the Sea itself.

You will undoubtedly observe, My lord, that the ships in activity and those ready to be activated at the first order constitute the essential part of the Navy. If to these two columns consisting of 67 Ships of the line mounting from 100 to 50 guns inclusively, 62 Frigates mounting from 44 to 20 guns inclusively and 55 ships mounting less than 20 guns, we add the ships requiring average repairs, consisting of 25 Ships of the line, 5 Frigates and one Sloop, we see that the foundation of the English Navy consists of 92 Ships of the line, 67 Frigates and 56 ships of less importance, or a total of 215 sails. Since these are the real forces that we would have to fight, should we be at war, it seems to me that we should make our plans on the basis of this foundation upon which we must properly fix our attention.

It is not enough to ascertain that it exists. We must also examine the works upon which it rests. The cruises strain the Ships. Thus, upon their return from their station, they are successively classified among the ships in need of more or less considerable repair. Each year, the weather causes damages and wear to those that remain in the Ports. Already several of the guardships are reputedly no longer in condition to undertake a hard cruise, and within a year or two, a number of those which are presently considered to be in excellent condition will be counted among the damaged ships in want of repair.

All the ships being built or repaired are therefore destined to replace rather than increase the number quoted above, and we must look upon this column as the feeding branch of the Navy. The ports have a three year supply of timber at the rate of 22 thousand tons per year. They must be constantly maintained on the same footing. Thus, My lord, these are sufficient means for the continuous upkeep of the foundation upon which we must direct our speculations.

We have placed the next column in the real foundation of the Navy, although the ships there included are not really in condition to put to sea. These are the sick who, in case of need, would soon be able to join the Army.

As for the Vessels that require major repair and consist of 14 Ships and seven frigates, they get weather-beaten a little more every day. We will see more of these go down among the condemned ships rather than come back into the column of ships in repair where they have to return before being reinstated among the sound ships. The last column contains only nominal forces and I will not mention them here. They are counted in the alphabetical list attached to the table. This list is composed of 141 Ships of the line, 88 frigates, 67 Vessels of lesser importance, for a total of 296 sails. I must warn you, My lord, that I placed in America by anticipation a few frigates and sloops which have not yet left for their destination. Furthermore, the list indicates the domestic distribution of the guardships and ships not in commission in the Ports and which, for this reason, I have omitted in the table.

The conclusion that we may draw from this table can be divided into two main points:

1. The number of Vessels of which the real forces of the English Navy are composed amounts to 92 Ships of the line, 67 frigates and 56 vessels of lesser importance, for a total of 215 sails.

2. Of this number those actually in activity consist of 35 Ships of the line, 61 frigates and 55 Vessels of lesser importance, for a total of 151 sails of which 89 are employed in North America.

By having the condition of each ship in different ports examined by expert people, I have avoided errors and I was able to classify each ship according to her worth. This examination brought us to find out that among the ships that are not employed, only 32 and one frigate could be readied at the first order, and 25 ships and six frigates would require repairs of 6 to 8 months.

If we distribute these forces by dividing them into squadrons of the required strength in time of war in the Mediterranean, Africa, the East and the West Indies, Europe, everywhere finally where England has possessions to defend, we find that they present an imposing display when gathered under a single point of view, but when they are spread over the immensity of the globe, they become hardly adequate to fulfill so many purposes, and England, by remaining on the defensive, would present many a weak point to her enemies. I am convinced that the English Ministers repeat this to themselves once in a while, and I believe that they are more occupied with preserving what they have than with planning new conquests. However, if we have every ground to remain at ease with respect to the considered designs of England, since we must suppose them to conform to the interest, the faculties, as well as the dispositions of a Nation and a Government which are inclined toward peace, we have everything to fear from sudden events which opportunity, chance, or the carelessness even of individuals may bring about, when we look at the advantage they would derive at the beginning of a war from their 150 vessels in activity. Three fourths of these ships being composed of frigates or sloops are most apt to privateer and consequently to make a clean sweep of our fishing and trade at a time when both of these would be defenseless.

Besides this advantage which the English, in their bad faith, will draw from the ships they have constantly cruising on all the seas, this system offers them a more honorable one in the number of officers that it forms for a profession requiring more practice than theory. Indeed, we cannot conceal from ourselves that the great superiority of the English Navy consists especially in the confidence and the emulation which reigns in it, spirit founded on the success and the experience of its officers who are accustomed to master their element. This is what would give them especially the means to wage an offensive war, the only type of war that befits a nation that can be lead only by victories and that would be without strength and credit in the course of a slow war barren of glorious ventures.

However, if these considerations, joined to our past experience, arouse our vigilance more and more and lead us to be more cautious than ever, we will be able to avoid in the next war as fatal a beginning as that of the preceding war. Once we are out of this awkward situation, everything leads us to assume that, regardless of the development of the war so to speak, it will end only with the complete downfall of England.

You will observe, My lord, that this conjecture rests mostly on the political situation of England and the contradiction that exists between her financial means and the extreme measures which she must take in order to activate her forces. This year Parliament voted for only 28 thousand sailors and the money voted for the Navy, although deemed to be insufficient, amounts to three million seven hundred and twenty seven thousand pounds Sterling. Should a rupture with the House of Bourbon occur, it would not be extravagant to estimate that England would have to employ three times as many sailors as she has today and triple the expense in proportion in order to support a war exposed to more considerable risks and losses than those suffered today against a Nation which has no Navy.

You will ask perhaps, why triple the number of sailors since it is obvious from the table on the Navy that one could not in any case double the number of Vessels in activity today? There are two answers to that: one stems from observation and the other from fact. The first one shows that among the 60 Vessels which remain to be employed, we count 57 Ships of the line which consequently require more numerous crews than the frigates and sloops presently at Sea, and, furthermore, one would also have to double the crews of the Ships already employed since they have only a few Privateers to fight today and need only a sufficient number of men to maneuver them. The second answer points to the example of the last war when we saw Great Britain use as many as 80 thousand sailors.

I shall end these observations, My lord, on the maritime forces of England by informing you that I made the necessary inquiries concerning the rumors found in the public papers to the effect that a few individuals here had Privateers with letters of marque against the Americans, and I found that this rumor, which is contrary to the assurances given to me by Lord North in this respect, is totally unfounded.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London, 28 June 1776

Yesterday, there was a conference at Lord Weymouth's. I took this opportunity to discuss with this Minister various matters about which I had already conversed with Lord Suffolk: . . .

As to the liberties taken by their cruising vessels, I also read to him the letters from Messrs. d'Ennery and d'Argout, and I observed to him that I did not officially request M. [Robert] Keeler's punishment, but that by referring the conduct of this officer to him it was our intention to leave to the prudence of the British Ministry to judge whether the best way to have their orders carried out was to punish those who did not conform to them. I tried to make him feel how important this [was] to them as it is to us by pointing out to him that the great care we take in this respect is the least equivocal proof of our desire to perpetuate the good intelligence. Lord Weymouth disapproves of the conduct of the English Officers, does not look for any excuses, does not mention the Americans smuggling with our Islands, falls back on the strict orders given to respect our Coasts and our Flag, promises to see to their execution and begs me to believe that they would be in despair if we had a ground to be unhappy. He will request information from the Admiralty concerning M. Keeler's conduct. Furthermore, up to now nothing seems to augur on the part of the English Ministers as offending an idea as that of limiting the direct trade of our Islands. Such pretentions may be ventured but they are nothing more than an act of sovereignty with regard to Holland and Denmark. I cannot imagine they would go that far with regard to France and Spain.

I shall remain on my guard, however, in order to wave aside as soon as I can see it coming a question which could only deeply hurt the King's dignity. The remark which you made so judiciously, My lord, about the behavior of the English during the disorders in Corsica had not escaped Doctor [Benjamin] Franklin who, before his departure for America, had quoted this example to me more than once; and I would have used it modestly without fail with regard to Lord Weymouth if he had led me to the subject of the similar contraband which afflicts them today. We found English guns in Corsica and we did not complain about it. If the English find French guns in America, they should wisely use the same reserve with us. The important point, My lord, is the one which you recommended to me with your usual foresight, I mean the prizes which the Americans might bring into our ports and which would be claimed by the English Government. If we had to shape our attitude according to what the English would do in a similar situation, the problem would soon be solved because we would not return them. At least we would be authorized not to agree to anything until we received letters of concessions by which the English would reciprocate each time we would claim a French ship, but in order to be valid, this security would have to be sanctioned by Parliament. Furthermore, My lord, I have not yet heard anything on this matter and I will not lose time forwarding to you any information I may obtain. Meanwhile, the prizes that would be taken to our Islands would apparently be sold there before any claim could intervene.

As we were about to take leave after yesterday's conference, this Minister told me in a trifling manner as if to make conversation that there had been much talk concerning our important armaments. I had not yet received, My lord, your dispatch of the 21st. I answered that, to my knowledge, we were not arming, but that I was not unaware that England was armed and that, while the Sea was covered with her ships under the command of Officers who did not breathe peace as much as the British Ministry and were most capable to commit acts of boldness that might shorten the continuance of the said peace, I would not be surprised that we took on our side the necessary steps to be ready for any eventuality. Lord Weymouth said that we should know the purpose of their armaments and that we could not doubt their peaceful intentions. I replied that we did not doubt it but that, since they had established a Squadron of observation in time of peace, they were to expect that this example would be followed. The Minister said that this establishment was already old, and he asked me if I knew when the Duke de Chartres would return. I answered that I believed his cruise should last 3 or 4 months, but that I did not remember exactly at what time his Squadron had sailed.

Morning Post and Daily Advertiser, MONDAY, JULY 1, 1776

By a gentleman who left Philadelphia in the end of February, we have received the following intelligence, which may be depended upon.

French vessels, both from the colonies and France, come in there daily; bringing sugar, melasses, salt-petre and other commodities; which they sell freely for cash, and provisions; particularly a vessel from Port L'Orient, brought in sixty tons of salt-petre, which was sold for upwards of 12,000 l. sterling. Two Frenchmen of note have continued there during the winter, one of whom was sent off to the camp at Cambridge, with an escort; the other staying at Philadelphia, greatly caressed by the Congress. It was suppose[d] they were agents from France, sent to observe the situation of things, and conclude a treaty with the new republic. — They are fitting out different squadrons of frigates and letters of marque, for various services, and to cruise against the West India trade. One small squadron has sailed for St. Helena, to intercept the East India trade. [Three blurred and indecipherable lines] Hopkins had sailed with eight vessels under his command; two of them frigates of thirty guns; their service was kept a secret. Some suppose them to be gone to France, to get such warlike stores, as they most want; some, to Rhode Island, to take Capt. Wallace, in the Rose; some to Virginia, to seize Lord Dunmore; others, that they are to cruise against the West-India trade. They are victualled for six months,

The people think of nothing but independence, and talk of war with pleasure. A man of war has not been seen or heard of in that river this whole winter. The trade up to the city is intirely free, and has not suffered the least obstruction. Their numerous provisions vessels, in their return from the Dutch and French islands, have got all safe back with powder, warlike stores and other goods. Cloathing they have in plenty at Philadelphia.—Their newspapers are stuffed with essays, in favour of independence. They leave to Wilkes, Burke, and their other part[i]zans in Britain, to dwell upon the hardships, impositions and tyranny of Britain, which they never felt, and speak boldly out, that a dependence on Britain, is a check upon their grandeur. They speak with contempt of the British constitution; and give this shrewd instance of its imperfection, that it has not power sufficient to keep its colonies in subjection. They say such a virtuous people as they are, ought to disdain any connection with such a vicious, corrupt nation as Britain; lest they share in the punishment, which is ready to overtake her.

A pamphlet greatly celebrated and much read among them, supposed to be written by Adams, and actually corrected by Franklin, and of which their several printing houses are vying, and multiplying copies, under the title of Common Sense, says, 'reconcilliation and ruin are near [illegible]' that the King of America lives on high; and delights not in the blood of his subjects like the Royal – of Britain; that by shaking off their dependence on Britain, they will make all Europe the guardians of their liberties, and open to themselves the ports of every nation: As a lure, on the other hand, they say, it can never be their interest, to make war with Europe; but they are silent respecting those sweet morsels, which the French and Spainards possess in America. They say Britain will come shortly crouching to them, begging to be allowed some small share of their trade. They remark on the folly of calling Britian their mother country; as if that title carried an idea of duty and respect; For Europe is their country, and Britain is indebted to them not they to Britain.–

It is confidently given out that a fleet of twenty ships of war, and eighty transports is preparing at Brest, to co-operate with the Americans, either in sweeping our helpless sugar islands, or in attacking Quebec. It is certain, the French governors here have offered all American vessels on their coasts protection; and that one of their men of war actually convoyed off this station, a vessel commanded by one Parker, which took in four hundred barrels of powder, at Martinico. Never was there such a brisk trade at St. Eustatia, as at present, to America, carried on chiefly, I believe, by renegado Englishmen; and though our few cruizers now and then take one of their provision vessels; yet they are so numerous, the loss is not felt. So inveterate are the Congress members against Britain, that though they are in want of every species of goods, they oblige every master of a vessel to bring certificates upon oath, that the commodities they import, are not of British manufacture. One of our merchants, who went down a few days ago to St. Eustatia, saw them actually cutting out the British mark, from a bale of goods shipping for America, to prepare it for the necessary affidavit: This circumstance you may assuredly depend upon as a truth.

One Tudor is superintending the building of three frigates, at New York. We expect our seas to swarm soon with their little privateers; and that our good friends the Dutch will give them all the assistance in their power. If the states general really wish us well, and I think they can only keep their own independency while Britain is powerful enough to protect them, they should allow us to keep consuls in St. Eustatia and Curraso [Curaçao] to prevent any improper trade with America: – Or if good sense had not this effect, suppose we stopped the interest of their money in our funds, to enable us to finish a war, which they formed and support. – The friends of America in St. Eustatia, and our several islands, send them constant intelligence of every thing transacted here, which they insert in their news-paper; nay, and point out to them, the active friends of government. Three or four more frigates upon this station, would have interrupted their trade greatly; but we seem to be intirely neglected.

Morning Post and Daily Advertiser, TUESDAY, JULY 2, 1776

London, July 2, 1776

By a gentleman who left Philadelphia in the end of February, we have received the following intelligence, which may be depended upon:

(Concluded.) [1]

If the men of war, for I think it will be impossible to assemble an army capable of acting this season, finish not the business this summer, we shall certainly have a French war on our hands, to call off our attention; a thing which the friends of America expect, and rejoice at the thoughts of; and in this case our sugar islands may fall an immediate prey; for it is certain the French are pushing out an extraordinary number of troops to all their settlements. A push should therefore be made in America, with the ships of war, and every floating stick of timber, every magazine for naval stores should, if possible, be destroyed. Every sailor taken should be carried to Europe, if not wanted in the fleet; and be distributed among the merchant men, particularly the India ships. — If we have a French war on our hands, a strong squadron should be immediately sent out to protect the sugar colonies, and transports should be ready before the middle of October, in America, to bring over at least 12,000 men to the West-Indies, and make at once a sweep of the French islands. In making the attack, their towns and plantations should be more aimed at than their strongholds. Indeed the only strong forts of consequence are at Martinico and the West end of Hispaniola.

When the American trade, and shipping are destroyed, you may leave these heroes to boast of their prowess, and parade their armies as they please; it will be a pity to risk the life of a gallant soldier against them. And in this case two expeditions might at once be carried on against Martinico and Hispaniola. And if we value the sugar trade, these islands should be suffered to be even deserted, rather than ever be returned to France. — I say this, on the supposition, that France is ungenerous enough to meddle in the present dispute.

We find, there is no attention given to the supplying of the sugar colonies with the articles, which they formerly had from America. Many improvident people begin already to be pinched for food; and there is no promise of a supply; 150,000 acres extraordinarily laid down for raising grain would more than supply all the West-Indian demands for inhabitants, poultry, and horses. — Suppose the bounty upon corn were confined at present to West Indian consumption; or that no bounty should take place till certificates were produced of a sufficient quantity shipped to the West Indies. If the British market were opened for rum by lessening the duty; it would be more profitable for us to be supplied with our provisions from Britain than from America. At present the British ships which take away our sugar, come generally out less than half laden. The freight of our provisions from Britain ought therefore to be but little additional expence; and much below what is necessary to support the American trade; and we should pay for them with our produce, instead of paying the Americans besides rum a considerable proportion of money, to supply them with cash, to buy French melasses and sugars, to injure our own consumption.

Franklin is so much revered in Philadelphia, that whenever he walks the streets, he has a crowd constantly at his heels. Sometime before the gentlemen left Philadelphia, he and some others of their chiefs, and Macleod [John Carroll] a priest, set off for Canada, to reconcile the Canadians to their measures, and frame a code of laws for them. We shall see if Parliament, or the free thinking Congress, be more favourable to popery

It is surprising to think of the number of ignorant fellows that you have suffered to carry out transports and storeships. One fellow has carried down his lading to dispose of it at Jamaica: Several, as we are here credibly informed, have given up their ships designedly to the Provincials; and numbers of them were so ignorant of the coast, as to come here to the West-Indies, rather than venture in. Every transport should have carried a navy Lieutenant or skillful midshipman, or master's mate, to keep the master to his duty, and guard against his treachery. It deserves to be a matter of enquiry, whether those masters, who have treacherously delivered up their ships, had any encouragment from the traitors in London; for the worst enemies of government are to be found there.

Notwithstanding all the boast of securing Philadelphia, by staking the river and building galleys with long guns, people begin to remove their effects from thence, expecting it to be laid in ashes. I abhore the burning of towns; and it would be a pity, if it could be avoided, that so fine a one as it is should be destroyed; though if any place has greater demerit than another it is this.

Though the colony would not take up arms to defend itself from the French, even when fire and destruction threatened, it has for a speculative point, run headlong into arms against its protector. It has shaken off the peaceable tenants of its founder; and raised the standard of rebellion in the very face of its charter; which expressly reserved taxation by Parliament: a reservation intended by Penn, to take the colony out of the power of the Crown, and make it dependent upon Parliament, as a situation most favourable to liberty. Little did he then think, that the time would come when America should solicit the crown, to take it out of the hands of parliament, and rebel against King and Parliament, because they were not indulged with their request; and that all who pretend to be patriots in Britain, should join in abetting their insolent demands. Might it not be made a convenient place of arms, till peace was restored.

Should France the good ally of the Americans attempt to entangle us in another distructive continen[t]al war, by attacking Hanover; suppose we were to transport all the Hanoverians to Pennsylvania and the middle colonies, and leave Hanover deserted as a bone of contention to be scrambled for by the Germans and French. The Hanoverians would gain a fertile territory by the exchange; and if we took care to make good regulations for them, we might exchange riotous and unprofitable rivals for faithful and useful subjects. Or suppose we were to give Hanover to Denmark for her sugar islands.

I think it hardly possible that the Americans can supply all their demands with the barter of provisions; so that their present trade must drain them entirely of their cash; flour as a specimen, is now at Philadelphia at 6s (currency, or about 4s. sterling) per 100 wt. Indeed nothing but paper is to be seen in circulation. Those who refuse to take it, are sent to work in slavery, in their iron mines.

The Jane (formerly the Minerva) [James] Fulton, a transport from Clyde to Boston, was taken by the Provincials on the 6th of May, and carried into Salem.[1]

The Jane, Fulton, taken by the Provincials, had a cargo on board, worth upwards of 6000 l. which is mostly insured at Glasgow.

A Gentleman who came from Georgia, and arrived in Town last Friday, says, that when they left America they had authentic Information of Commodore Hopkins, together with the Provincial Fleet, being blocked up in the Harbor of New London, by Captain Wallis [James Wallace], of Rhode Island, and several of the King's Ships, and that it was impossible for one of Hopkins's Ships to retreat or get over the Bar; it seems he had put in there for a Supply of Powder and Provision.

Letters from Holland say, that the States have issued out an Order for no Ship to take Arms or Ammunition to any Part of his Britannic Majesty's Dominions, on the Forfeiture of the Ship and Cargo, and Imprisonment of the Officers belonging to such Ships; the Order to continue in Force so long as the Americans continue in Arms against their Sovereign.

Advice is received by Tuesday's Irish Mail, that an American Vessel, being in great Distress, for want of Provisions, put into a Creek in the North Part of Ireland, where the People seized her, and after plundering the Vessel of every Thing of Value, and stripping the People, they set fire to the Ship, and consumed it; they then suffered the Crew to depart, who got to Kinsale in a most deplorable Condition.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London, 5 July 1776

You are informed, My lord, of the plans for the Royal Army in Canada. The intention is to penetrate the English Colonies by way of the Lakes Champlain and George. It has been admitted that much time will be needed to build the boats required for this passage. Then, these boats will have to be carried from one lake to the other and the Americans will have to be overcome at Ticonderoga. We might say that first of all the Lakes must be reached.

. . . Such are the plans for this country, as you have known them for a long time, My lord, and as they were explained to me on the map by Lord Barrington, Secretary at War. He intends to encircle New England in such a way as to cut all communications with the Southern Provinces.

. . . Their enemy claims that they [the Americans] lack everything; but we know that in spite of the vigilance of the English Cruisers they have ammunition in fair abundance. It is only feared that they are poorly supplied with locks for their firearms. They have quite recently captured the transport Hope which had sailed from Corke for Boston with a cargo of 75 tons of powder, one thousand rifles, a few military waggons, and six gun-carriages.[2] This prize as well as the capture of other transports is one of the lesser consequences of the unexpected evacuation of Boston.

EDICT OF KING JOSEPH OF PORTUGAL[1]

Joseph, by the grace of God, king of Portugal and of the Algrave, &c. I make known to all who shall see this present edict, that having been lately informed, that the English Colonies in America, had not only separated themselves by an act of the Congress, the 15th of May last, from the subjection to the crown of Great-Britain, but also were making laws of their own, and giving particular power to resist the lawful authority of his Britannic Majesty my good brother, friend and ally: and whereas so pernicious an example ought to interest even the most indifferent princes not to favour or assist, directly or indirectly, subjects thus publicly and formally rebelling against their lawful sovereign: it is my will and pleasure to order, that in all the ports of these kingdoms and its dominions, no shelter shall be given to any ships loaded or in ballast, coming from any of the ports of the said North American British colonies, but on the contrary, that they are to be repelled from the said ports, and in the same manner they entered, without giving them the least succour of any kind whatsoever. The masters of ships, who have been permitted to enter hitherto, in consideration of not having received any express injunction to the contrary shall be notified to depart with their ships out of the above mentioned ports within the space of eight successive days, without fail; examination being had before their departure, if they have on board any gunpowder, or other warlike stores of the kinds already prohibited by my royal orders, given the 21st of October last, to the arsenal of the army, and to the office of outward consulship; and confiscating, for the benefit of the public works, any of the said ships on board of which shall be found clandestinely concealed any of the above mentioned warlike stores, as goods rightly seized and manifestly known to be the property of rebels. Our Lord the King hath ordered this by his royal decree of the 4th of this current month of July, and directed to his royal council, commanding it to be printed and set up in all public places of Lisbon and ports of this kingdom, and of the Algraves, in order that every one should have notice thereof, and that no person may pretend ignorance.

Sir, [Admiralty Office] 6th July 1776.

I send you herewith the Secret Instructions which my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been pleased to sign for your proceedings with the Sloop you command and the Discovery Sloop commanded by Captain [Charles] Clerke; But as Captain Clerke is not yet able to repair on board the Discovery, and it is of great consequence that you should yourself proceed to the Cape of Good Hope without delay, I have it in command from their Lordships to signify their direction to you to put to Sea with the first opportunity of wind and weather without the Discovery Sloop, leaving directions for her Commander (to be delivered to him on his arrival at Plymouth) to follow you to the Cape of Good Hope without a moment's loss of time; And as their Lordships do not wish that you should wait for him at the Cape any longer than you think it may be done with prudence, and without risking any inconvenience to the further progress of your Voyage, it is their Lordships farther direction that if you judge it proper to sail from the Cape before the Discovery arrives, you do, in that case, leave with a trusty person, to be delivered to her Commander upon his arrival, such Rendezvous, and Accounts of the Course you intend to steer, as you shall think most likely to effect his speedy junction with you.

Their Lordships command me to add that a Copy of your Secret Instructions will be delivered to Capt Clerke before he sails from Plymouth, with directions to him to open them, and execute them as far as he is able, in case he should not, after using his utmost efforts, be able to join you according to the Rendezvous you will leave for him; but to deliver them to you unopened, in case he should join you.

I most heartily wish you a succesful Voyage;[2] and am &ca

My lord, [Paris, July 8, 1776][2]

Although it seems from public notices in the different ports of the Kingdom that American Ships come in freely in order to exchange the Goods which they bring from their Colonies for Merchandise from our Continent, the Supplicant, a Merchant in the City of Bordeaux, uncertain as to whether this new Traffic is carried by virtue of some special permission, and unwilling to innovate without the approbation of the Government dares request very humbly, My lord, permission to give ear to the trade offers which might be made to him by American Shipowners.

388-825 O - 73 - 32

The latter may offer the following trade items:

Sperm oil	Tar	Masts and spars of all sizes
do. from other fish	Turpentine
Rice	Pelts	Wood for cooperage
Tobacco	Indigo	Salt-wort
Sperm candles	Boards of oakwood	Flour
Pitch	do. of pine

And a number of other essential items.

In exchange, this Nation may take Wines, Spirits, a quantity of manufactured articles of infinite variety.

The favor which the Government may grant the French merchants in this circumstance is of the greatest consequence for the State since it would enable them to obtain at first hand and for a much better price the same merchandise which the English and the Dutch bring us only after a profit to two or three other hands.

This would also present a most essential advantage to the Farm General, especially if the Farmers General are satisfied with ordinary and fairly reasonable duty charges so as not to frighten the Merchants in their New Speculations.

The Supplicant will act only by virtue of the permission he dares expect from the kindness of Count de Vergennes by whom he already has the honor to be protected having the advantage to be his compatriot.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London 9 July 1776

I have the honor to send you herewith the Translation of a resolution passed by Congress and published on the 15th of May, to abolish any authority on the part of the Crown, and to recommend to each Colony to chose its own Government. It is even reported that, in consequence, the provinces of South Carolina and Georgia have already elected each a Governor, a Council and an Assembly.

The instructions of the Capital of the Province of Massachusett[s] tend no less but to divest the King of Great Britain of any authority in America, and the language used in them is of the most hostile nature. The King of England has already made the only reply of which they might be susceptible. He has sent fifty thousand men and a fleet of eighty sails to subdue these Colonies. Considerable forces such as these can only be victorious wherever they attack, and with military victories coming to the support of political operations, we must hope that this year will see the end of a war detrimental to the subsistence of our Islands and which may provoke incidents that might endanger general Peace.

On the 5th of this month, an accident occurred in Portsmouth on board the guardship Marlborough. Four barrels of powder which had been set aside by the Gunner caught fire. The explosion caused great damage to the ship and cost the lives of 17 persons besides 43 men who were critically wounded. This ship had been recently brought from the roadstead to the port for repair. Fortunately, most of the powder had been removed from the magazine when the accident took place. It is believed that these four barrels which caught fire had been set aside by some dishonesty of the Gunner who proposed to sell them for profit. The Captain was not on board the ship of which the crew was composed of only 180 men. I have not heard that any officer was wounded.

This affair it is thought will be a good pretence for the French to take advantage of the present disturbances between England and her colonies. The Frenchmen are, however, treated with the utmost respect, notwithstanding several letters which were found on board the vessel, have been opened and perused by Admiral Gayton, leave no shadow of a doubt that the French are absolutely assisting the Americans to the utmost of their abilities.

VERGENNES TO M. DE CLUGNY[1]

[Extract] Versailles, 10 July 1776

It seems to me, Sir, that our political interest, as well as our commercial interest, requires that we treat favorably the Americans who frequent our ports; indeed, if they succeed in establishing the freedom of their trade, they will have already developed the habit of dealing with our merchants, and if they fail, we will have entertained with them, at least momentarily, a trade exchange which is obviously to our advantage. Therefore I think, Sir, that we are in the position to show the greatest marks of favor to the American vessels and that the circumstances in which they find themselves should exempt them from the rigor of the decree of 1701 as well as from the decision of the Council of 1742. This last point presents less drawbacks since the English Colonists can only import their own produce into our country and since they have almost no merchandise or industrial products to bring us; but whatever their imports may be, I believe not only that we should not forbid them, but on the contrary, that it is advisable to relax the duties that we may be in a position to require from them. I also believe, Sir, that it would be proper to allow the Americans to export by way of other foreign vessels the articles which we could not admit: this is the method followed in England; besides the advantages it presents to the Americans, it may help to establish a store between the English Colonies and the European nations that need their products. . . . I think it would be necessary to take all the precautions that prudence might suggest so that our motives and our views and even our procedures remain hidden from the English; in this respect, I can only rely entirely upon the instructions which you will deem proper to issue.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London, 12 July 1776

The English Ministers no longer mention our Armaments to me; but I have heard that they are becoming alarmed. Some of their confidants claim even that the differences with Portugal depend upon the war with the Colonies, that is to say they consider this discussion as a pretext that will be used according to the state of affairs; that, if England meets with rapid success in America, the Portuguese affair will settle down, whereas in the opposite case, it would determine general war. This smacks too much of metaphysics and I don't believe it is the opinion of the English Ministers. I would think rather that Portugal is trying to spread this notion. However far from the truth it may be, I would not be surprised if it made proselytes in the system now favored here whereby Spain wants war and we shall not fail on our side to take advantage of the distress which afflicts England.

The second Hessian division was forced by adverse winds to enter the harbor of Plymouth on the 6th inst. . . .

The Treasury is presently commissioning on the Thames 25 Vessels of 120 to 400 tons carrying from 4 to 10 guns, without any fixed number of crew. Our Correspondent in Deptford informs us that they take as many as they can find; and that the number of these Vessels which are to carry supplies from Ireland to America is still to increase. It is probable that, unable to provide convoys to all the Vessels that sail singly to America, the Government felt the necessity to enable them to defend themselves. At least, it is the most natural explanation and it is also my opinion. However, if we wished to look at the dark side of things, it would not be difficult to regard all these preparations as some dreadful plan capable to arouse the attention of the neighboring Powers since, if need be, all these Vessels could soon become as many Privateers.

I have just learned at this instant that a City Merchant received intelligence that the Ship on which Doctor Irwin [Charles Irving] had sailed to found a new Establishment on the Mosquito Coast in the Gulf of Honduras was captured by two Spanish Coast-Guard vessels in the mouth of the Black River.[2]

. . . What is certain on the side of the Americans is their activity at sea and the ships of the Crown they are capturing. They recently seized three transports, one of which named the Hope had a cargo of one thousand carbines, much powder and other munitions; so even if the abovementioned declaration by Congress were not true, these operations make it evident their determination to resist the strength of England.

The other day the 74-gun warship Marlborough, one of the eighteen assigned to guard duty in the ports of these kingdoms, burned its main deck and its entire hull warped when fire broke out in three barrels of gunpowder. . . .

DR. BARBEU DUBOURG TO VERGENNES[1]

My lord, Paris, this 13th of July 1776

I saw M de Beaumarchais this morning, and following your express authorisation, I gladly conferred with him without reservation. Everyone knows his good sense, his talent, and no one gives more credit than myself for his honesty, his discretion, his zeal for everything that is great and good; I believe he is one of the men best suited to political negotiations, but perhaps at the same time least suited to the business of trade. He likes ostentation, he is said to support young ladies, he passes for a spendthrift finally, and there is not a single merchant or manufacturer in France who does not entertain this notion about him and does not hesitate a great deal to do business with him.

Therefore, I was quite surprised when he informed me that you had instructed him not only to advise you but also to center around him alone the whole and the detail of all trade operations for the export as well as the import either of war ammunition or usual goods, from France to the united Colonies, and from the Colonies to France, the management of all the business, the determination of prices, the settlement of deals, the contracts and the collections to be made, the debts to be paid off &ca. I agreed with him that it might ensure somewhat better the secrecy of all these operations, but I objected to him that by taking hold of all this immense traffic and by excluding completely people who had gone to such an expense, endured so much fatigue and run so many risks at the service and by order of Congress, he would give them good reason to shout monopoly and deeply wrong them, whereas they deserved quite a different fate.[2] He told me that this would not cause any prejudice to them and made full use of his eloquence to prove it to me after a fashion. I confess that these particular motives would not weigh heavily enough in the balance against the necessity for secrecy in such a critical conjuncture; but may I doubt whether there are not other means, whether there are not even better means to ensure this important secrecy, because assuredly M.de Beaumarchais, with all the resources of his genius, could not do without employing at the same time many subordinate agents who would always be less discreet than merchants whose chief aim is to conceal their speculations and to distrust continually every one. But I shall return to my first and most important reflection and I beg you, My lord, to give it all your consideration. There may be a hundred, perhaps a thousand persons in France who, although much less talented than M. de Beaumarchais, could better serve your views while inspiring more confidence to those with whom they would deal in trade, either French or American, in the cities, the ports, the factories &ca. . .[3]

2. Dubourg was pleading the cause of Penet & Pliarne, who recently had formed a partnership with M. Gruel, a prominent merchant in Nantes. Penet and Pliarne came to America in 1775, and had made contracts with Nicholas and John Brown in Rhode Island and with the Secret Committee of the Continental Congress. Penet returned to France, but his partner remained as the American representative.

The Sloop St. Peter, of New-York, under Dutch Colours, from St. Ustatia to Amsterdam with Tobacco, Sugar and Rum, is taken by the Dolphin Cutter, Capt. Miller, and brought into Cowes.

They write from Boston, that the Privateers yet at Sea are mostly small; but there are a great many on the Stocks, which will be soon launched, to carry from 16 to 24 Guns; and several Frigates are building, and some of them near finished, in different Parts on the Continent, for the public Service, which will mount from 36 to 44 Guns.

There is a very advantageous Trade carried on from New England, which in fact is at the general Risque, as they insure for each other; and although several of their Vessels are taken, they nevertheless find it very beneficial, as nine out of ten escape; and it is said the same good Fortune attends the Adventurers in other Colonies; the Value of the Vessels, and the Cargoes taken from them is trifling, whereas those they take are worth more in Proportion than ten to one. In short, their Success is so pleasing, that in consequence the Spirit for Privateering is so prevelant, that they intend the West-Indies, and other Parts, shall swarm with them next Winter.

Advise is received by the London, Hall, which is arrived at Brightelmstone from Tobago, that the American Privateers swarm about every Island in order to intercept our homeward-bound Ships, and that many Vessels which have been loaded for some Time are fearful of sailing till they can procure a Convoy to England.

The following letter was received on Saturday from Mr. Charles Barns, Commander of the Snow Blake, in the Service of Government, dated Cadiz Bay, June 20. — "Yesterday Morning I chased an American Ship, of about 250 Tons, into this Bay, but cannot take her, it being a Foreign Port. I never was more surprised in my Life, when I found there were three American Privateers riding here at single Anchor, and a Number of their Merchant Vessels loading and unloading at their Quays. . . ."

BEAUMARCHAIS TO SILAS DEANE[1]

18th July 1776

I don't know, sir, if you have any body with you, whom you may trust for translating the French letters, which treat on important affairs. On my part I shall not be able to treat with security in English, till after the return of a person whom I expect at this moment from London, and who will be an interpreter between us, meanwhile I have the honor to inform you, that I had for some time past, the desire of helping the brave Americans to shake off the English yoke. I have already tried several means to open secret and sure correspondence between the general Congress and a house which I am about to establish on that occasion; I shall exert my endeavors to provide the continent either by way of our West Indies or straight from here if possible, all such articles which the Americans shall be in need of, and which they can not any more get from England. I have already mentioned my plan to a gentleman in London who pretends to be much attached to America,[2] but our correspondence, since I left England having been carried on with difficulty and in ciphers, I have received no answer to my last, in which I tried to fix some terms for that great and important affair.

But since you are vested with a character which permits me to have confidence in you, I shall be very glad to begin anew, in a manner more certain and more regular, a negotiation which was before but touched on. My means are not very considerable, but they may be much increased if we can establish together, a treaty of which the conditions shall be honorable and advantageous and the execution of the same shall be exact.

I can not grant either to Mr. Dubourg or to anybody else, the confidence of speaking freely of my plan; but when you have compared the nature of the offers which shall be made to you from every quarter, to the disinterested zeal which attaches me to the cause of America, you will perceive what difference there is between treating with common merchants and on the hardest terms, and the good fortune of meeting with a generous friend who shall think himself happy in proving to your nation, and to you, its secret representative, how truly he is devoted to them. I am sir, Your &c. &c.

Advice is received from St. Maloes, that the Americans carry on a very extensive trade to that place; that no less than seven vessels arrived there the first week in June, and at the time the account came away, there were four more just arrived.

The certain accounts daily received of the many captures made by the American privateers, have roused the Underwriters from their lethargy; the Ministry have lulled them a long time with a notion, that the Americans had very few privateers out; and those were of such small force, that a merchant ship which carried a few guns might beat them off; but behold they are convinced, to their great cost, that they have been led into an error; for that the Americans are very powerful at sea; that some of the privateers carry guns enough to engage the largest frigate we have; and it is well known that New-England produces as fine and brave sailors as Old England.

The ministerial gentry in the City have taken great pains to stifle the report of four Jamaica ships being taken by the Provincial privateers, and have prevailed on many to give no credit to it. On the other hand, others believed, that it would not have been entered in New Lloyd's book, without they had some foundation for it.

SILAS DEANE TO BEAUMARCHAIS[1]

Sir, [Paris] July 20th, 1776

In compliance with your request at our interview of yesterday, I send you inclosed copies of my commission, and an extract from my instructions which will fully satisfy you of my being authorized to make the purchases I have applied to you for. To understand this extract, it is necessary to inform you that I was ordered to make my first application to the ministers and to procure the supplies wanted of them by way of purchase or loan; and in case the credit or influence of Congress should not be such under the present circumstances to obtain them from that quarter, I was instructed then to apply elsewhere. My application to the minister and his answer I have already acquainted you with. With respect to the credit which will be required for the goods and stores which I propose to engage of you, I hope that a long one will not be necessary. Twelve months has been the longest credit my countrymen have ever been accustomed to, and Congress having engaged large quantities of tobacco in Virginia and Maryland, as well as other articles in other parts, which they will ship as fast as vessels can be provided; I have no doubt but very considerable remittances will be made within six months from this time and for the whole within a year; this I shall in my letters urge Congress to do. But the events of war are uncertain, and our commerce is exposed to be affected thereby: I hope, however, that at least such remittances will be made you, that you will be able to wait for whatever sum may remain due after the credit we shall agree on is expired, having the usual interest allowed you.

I send you also an invoice of the clothing and of many articles of the furniture and stores, necessary for our army, in which I can not be so particular at present, as it will be necessary to be hereafter in case you undertake it; but as the articles for the uniforms can at this time be ascertained as well as ever, I have made out a detail of them; though my instructions speak of but 100 brass cannon, and of arms and clothing for 25,000 men, yet considering the importance of the articles to America, I shall, (if to be obtained) venture in a larger quantity, the probability of some part being taken, with other circumstances, will, I think, fully justify me therein. But it is improper to add on this subject until you resolve whether you will undertake, and on the terms, which I presume you will do. As soon as you shall have obtained a translation of this and the enclosed, I will do myself the honor of waiting on you; In the mean time, I am, with the utmost respect and attachment, Sir, [&c.]

I wrote you every material occurrence to the time of my leaving Bordeaux, and sent duplicates by Captains Palmer, Bunker, and Seaver, one of which you will undoubtedly have received before this comes to hand. I left that city on the last of June and arrived here the Saturday following, having carefully attended to everything in the manufacturing or commercial towns in my way; which, indeed, are neither numerous nor of great consequence. I spent at Angouleme a day in viewing what, as to manufactures alone, deserves attention on the journey – the foundry for cannon, where the greatest part of those used in the kingdom are manufactured. The cannon are cast solid, after which they are put as in a turner's lathe and bored out and the outside smoothed and turned at pleasure. They can bore and complete a twelve-pounder in one day in each lathe, which takes four men only to work. The workmen freely showed me every part of their furnace and foundry. On Monday after my arrival I waited on my bankers, and found that Mr. [Edward] Bancroft had arrived the same day with me, Mr. Thomas Morris and M. Venzonals[8] about ten days before. I waited on M. Dubourg and delivered him Dr. Franklin's letter, which gave the good gentleman the most sincere and real pleasure.

M. Penet, on his arrival in Paris, waited on M. Dubourg, showed him a copy of his contract with the committee of Congress, and told him he had letters from Dr. Franklin to him, but had left them on the road or at Rotterdam through fear of a search. He told M. Dubourg, to whom he was a perfect stranger, so many particular circumstances that he could not doubt of his sincerity, and in consequence he embarked in his affairs to a large amount. Five or six weeks have now passed without the arrival of the letters said to be left on the road. Arms, powder, etc. to a large sum were in readiness, when my arrival gave him confidence that I would take the burden off him, as he doubted not that my credentials would be explicit. I saw immediately the arrangement of the whole, and that M. Penet had returned to France (copy of the contract excepted) almost as empty-handed as he came to Philadelphia, yet had found means to collect a very considerable quantity of stores, part of which he had actually shipped. This circumstance gave me hopes; yet I found that it would now be expected I should become responsible for the articles, which embarrassed me much, since to detain them would be quite disagreeable, and to step out of my own line and involve myself with Messrs. Plairne and Penet's contract would be equally so.

M. Penet had somehow got intelligence of my being in France and that I was expected at Paris; he therefore waited for me, and I saw him the next day at my hotel, when he complained of want of remittances, and desired me to pledge my credit for the stores, which I waived in the best manner I could, for I saw the consequences might involve me in many difficulties and frustrate my greater designs. I therefore told him I would certify to the merchants, if necessary, that the Congress would pay for whatever stores they would credit them with; and in the mean time advised him to proceed strictly agreeable to the letter of the contract, and I was positive that the Congress would fulfill their part of it. I finally satisfied both him and M. Dubourg, and he parted for Nantes to ship the goods the next day. I must do him the justice that is his due: he has been indefatigable in the business; his heart seems to be entirely in it and I believe him honest; but his connections, either commercial or political, are not of themselves equal to such an undertaking; but the cause he was employed in had in a great measure, I found, supplied this deficiency, which was to me a favorable appearance.

M. Dubourg told me that the ministers would not see me, as they meant to be quite secret in any countenance they gave the United Colonies, and that my arrival in France was already known in London, in consequence of which Lord Stormont arrived express but a few days before and had applied to the court on the subject. I showed him my commission and told him I was determined to apply; for every circumstance, in my opinion, was favorable instead of otherwise. On this he wrote a letter to Count de Vergennes, asking liberty to introduce me the Thursday following, on which day I went to Versailles, and, though the letter had not been delivered to his excellency, yet he gave us immediate admission. Fortunately his chief secretary spoke English well, by which means I had an opportunity of conversing freely with him on the subject of my commission for two hours, and was attentively and favorably heard by him and was asked many questions, which shows that the American disputes had been, and still were, a principal object of attention. I pursued nearly the line marked out by my instructions, stating the importance of the American commerce and the advantages Great Britain had received from a monopoly of it. That, all intercourse ceasing between the two countries, the Colonies had considered where they might dispose of that produce which they necessarily had so large a surplus of, and receive for their raw or first materials the various manufactures they wanted. That they first turned their eyes on France as the best country on Europe for them to be connected with in commerce. That I was purchasing a large quantity of manufactures, for which I expected to pay the money, and that I would want a quantity of military stores, for which remittances would be made. That I doubted not the Colonies had before this declared independency, and that I should soon receive instructions, in consequence, more full and explicit; that in the mean time they were very anxious to know how such a declaration would be received by the powers in Europe, particularly by France, and whether in such case an ambassador would be received from them, etc.?

To which he replied that the importance of the American commerce was well known, and that no country could so well supply the Colonies, and in turn receive their produce, as France; it was therefore the interest of both to have the most free and uninterrupted intercourse, for which reason the court had ordered their ports to be kept open and equally free to America as to Britain. That, considering the good understanding between the two courts of Versailles and London, they could not openly encourage the shipping of warlike stores, but no obstruction of any kind would be given; if there should, as the custom houses were not fully in their secrets in this matter, such obstructions should be removed on the first application. That I must consider myself perfectly free to carry on any kind of commerce in the kingdom which any subject of any other state in the world might, as the court had resolved their ports should be equally free to both parties. That I was under his immediate protection and should I meet with any difficulty, either from their police, with the rules of which he supposed me unacquainted, or from any other quarter, I had but to apply to him and everything should be settled. That as to independency, it was an event in the womb of time, and it would be highly improper for him to say anything on that subject until it had actually taken place; meantime, he informed me that the British ambassador knew of my arrival, and therefore advised me not to associate with Englishmen more than I was from necessity obliged, as he doubted not I should have many spies on my conduct.

I then told him the precautions I had taken, and should persevere in, in coming from Bermuda, and that I did not mean in public to pass for other than a merchant from the Island on speculation during the present cessation of commerce in America; but, at the same time, I told his excellency that I was well assured it was known in London that I was coming long before I arrived in Paris, and I doubted not they conjectured my errand; but at the same time I should take every precaution in my power, and most sincerely thanked him for his protection and assistance so generously offered, which he might depend I would never abuse. He was pleased with my having come by Bermuda and passing as an inhabitant of that island, and said if questioned he should speak of me in that character. He then asked me many questions with respect to the Colonies, but what he seemed most to want to be assured of was their ability to subsist without their fisheries and under the interruption of their commerce. To this I replied in this manner: That the fisheries were never carried on but by a part of the Colonies, and by them not so much as a means of subsistence as of commerce. That, the fisheries failing, those formerly employed in them turned part to agriculture and part to the army and navy. That our commerce must for some time be in a great measure suspended, but that the greater part of our importations were far from being necessaries of life, consequently we should not suffer under the want of them, whilst it was not wealth or luxuries that we were contending for. That, our commerce ceasing, it would be out of the power of our enemies to support themselves on our plunder, and on the other hand our ships, as privateers, might harass their commerce without a possibility of their retaliating. That I hoped to see a considerable marine force in the Colonies, and that, joined to the impossibility of Britain's guarding so extensive a coast, would preserve some of our commerce until it should be thought an object deserving the protection of other powers.

After many questions on this subject he put this, in which I thought he seemed interested — whether, if the Colonies declare an independency, they would not differ among themselves? To this I replied that the greatest harmony had as yet subsisted, and that I had no grounds to doubt it in future; that the common danger which first drove them into measures which must end in such a declaration would subsist, and that alone was sufficient to insure their union.

He then desired me to give his secretary my address, and said, though he should be glad to see me often, yet as matters were circumstanced his house was too public a place, but that I might put the same confidence in his secretary as in himself, to whom I might apply for advice and direction; but that whenever anything of importance occurred I need but inform him and he would see me, but on common occasions I must address the secretary, which would be every way more convenient, as he understood the English language well and was a person in whom the greatest confidence could be placed. Having settled the mode of intercourse, I expressed the sense I had of his excellency's politeness and the generous protection he had given me, and on parting said if my commission or the mode of introducing the subject were out of the usual course, I must rely on his goodness to make allowances for a new-formed people, in circumstances altogether unprecedented, and for their agent, wholly unacquainted with courts. To which he replied that the people and their cause were very respectable in the eyes of all disinterested persons, and that the interview had been agreeable.

After this I returned to Paris with M. Dubourg, whose zeal for the American cause led him to draw the most favorable consequences from this beginning. The next day, while from home, I was informed that Count Laureguais had inquired out my lodgings, immediately after which he asked leave to go for England, which was refused by the court. The same day I was informed that Sir Hans Stanley and Sir Charles Jenkinson, who I knew were at Bordeaux when I left it, were in France for the sole purpose of inquiring what agents were here from the Colonies and what commerce or other negotiations between them and the Colonies was carrying on. This alarmed my friends and as I had agreed for other lodgings, to which I was next day to remove, M. Dubourg advised me to secrete both my lodgings and name. I told him that the Count Laureguais' conduct appeared mysterious, yet I could never think of keeping myself secret, for though I should not seek these gentlemen nor throw myself purposely in their way, yet I must think it an ill compliment to Count Vergennes to suppose, after what had passed, that I was not on as good and safe footing in France as they or any other gentleman could be. However, his uneasiness made him write to the count what he had advised, who returned for answer that such a step was both unnecessary and impolitic, as it would only strengthen suspicions by giving every thing an air of mystery, while there was not the least occasion for it.

The next day I had a fresh conference with M. Dubourg, who brought me a number of memorials from officers and engineers offering their services in America, some of whom I believe deserve the utmost encouragement; but more of this hereafter. While I was casting in my mind how best to improve the present favorable crisis for supplying the Colonies, Monsieur Beaumarchais made proposals for procuring whatever should be wanted, but in such a manner as was understood by M. Dubourg to amount to a monopoly, which indeed was not his only objection for Monsieur Beaumarchais; though confessedly a man of abilities, had always been a man of pleasure and never of business; but as he was recommended by Count Vergennes, M. Dubourg could not avoid noticing him, but immediately expostulated with the count in a letter, which brought on embarrassments no way favorable, and I saw that M. Dubourg was so far from sounding the views of his superior in this manoeuver, that he was, with the best intentions in the world, in danger of counteracting his own wishes, the extent of which were to obtain the supplies of merchants and manufacturers on the credit of the Colonies, in which the strictest punctuality and most scrupulous exactness would be necessary, and which, under the present difficulties of remittance I feared would not be lived up to.

As I had learned that in the late reform of the French army they had shifted their arms for those of a lighter kind, the heavy ones, most of which were the same as new, to the amount of seventy or eighty thousand, lay useless in magazines, with other military stores in some such proportion, I apprehended it no way impossible to come at a supply from hence through the agency of some merchant, without the ministry being concerned in the matter. In such case the merchant would be accountable to the ministry and the Colonies to the merchant, by which means a greater time of payment might be given and more allowance in case of our being disappointed. With this in view, I went to Versailles on Wednesday, the 17th. and waited on M. Gerard, first secretary of foreign affairs, and presented to him the inclosed memorial, which led to a very particular conversation on the affairs of America, and which I turned finally on this subject, to which he would not then give me any immediate answer, but promised me one in a day or two. Returning to town, I found Messrs. Dubourg and Beaumarchais had a misunderstanding, the latter giving out that he could effect everything we wished for, and the former, from the known circumstances of M. Beaumarchais and his known carelessness in money matters, suspecting he could procure nothing, and the more so as he promised so largely. They parted much displeased with each other, and Mons. Beaumarchais went directly to Versailles. On M. Dubourg's coming and informing me what had passed I immediately wrote to M. Gerard the inclosed letter, and in return was desired to come with M. Dubourg the next morning to Versailles.

We went as desired, and after explaining many things to M. Gerard, had a conference with his excellency, from whom I had fresh assurances of the utmost freedom and protection in their ports and on their coasts; that, in one word, I might rely on whatever Mons. Beaumarchais should engage in the commercial way of supplies, which, indeed, was all I wished for, as I was on the safe side of the question, viz. on the receiving part. I communicated to his excellency that clause of my instructions for procuring arms, etc. of which he asked a copy. I then informed him that I considered the present as the most critical juncture of American affairs; that the campaign would undoubtedly be carried far into the winter; that supplies now shipped might arrive very seasonably in the fall to enable the Colonies to hold out the present campaign. He replied that no delay should be made by any obstruction of any officer, or others, of the customs or police. He then told me that Count Laureguais was perhaps a well-meaning man, but not sufficiently discreet for such purposes as this; that Mr. Lee (meaning Mr. Arthur Lee of London), had confided, he feared, too much in him, and wished me to caution him on the subject, and that if I would write to him he would inclose it in a letter of his by a courier that evening. I most readily embraced this safe way of corresponding, and sent a letter I had before written, with an addition on this subject, a copy of which is inclosed.

I have thus given you the heads of my negotiations to this time, July 20, and will not take up your time in making remarks on it and the prospect before me, which are obvious, but inform you of the plan I mean to pursue in the execution of my commission, and hint some methods by which I think I may be enabled to complete every part of it to your satisfaction and the relief of my country, which is all my wish and the extent of most ambitious hopes. I go on the supposition of an actual, unconditional independency, without which little can be effected publicly; with it, almost everything we can wish for.

It is by no means probable that Europe will long remain in a state of peace. The disputes between Portugal and Spain are on the point of producing an open rupture; the former relies on England; the latter will look to this kingdom, and has already applied to this court on the subject. Nothing but the division of Poland has taken the king of Prussia's attention off from the injustice done him in Great Britain at the close of the last war. He has now completed his part of that extraordinary work, and, I am well informed, listens with pleasure to the dispute between the United Colonies and Great Britain. He is ambitious of becoming a maritime power, and is already in possession of the capital ports of the Baltic; but without commerce it is impossible to effect the design, and no commerce can put him so directly in the road as the American. The consumption of coffee, sugar, and other West India productions increases fast in the north of Europe, and it must be his interest at least to supply his own dominions. In case of a war in Europe, France, Spain and Prussia might be brought into one interest, and the Emperor of Germany is too closely connected with his majesty of France to take part against them, after which, Great Britain having her whole force employed in America, there could be nothing on the one hand to prevent Spain and France from reducing Portugal to a submission to the former, nor from Prussia and France subduing and incorporating into their own dominions Hanover and the other little mercenary electorates which lie between them, and which for several centuries have been one principal cause of every war that has happened in Europe.

With respect to Russia, it is as closely allied to Prussia as to Great Britain, and may be expected to be master in the contest. Denmark and Sweden are a balance for each other and opposites. Not to enlarge on this plan at present, I have only to suggest that an application to the King of Prussia will do no harm, and may be attended with good and great consequences; the Prussian ambassador at this court and at that of London may be sounded on the subject. But my powers and instructions are so limited that I can by no means take such a step; yet when I see Great Britain exerting her whole force, and that of her allies and courting every power in Europe to aid her, I can but wish she may be counteracted in her own system, and, by having employ found for her in Europe, bring her to leave America in peace, and I think myself bound in duty to hint at what to me seems the most probable means. Dr. Bancroft was full with me in this opinion.[4]

2. This letter, in Wharton, bears the date August 18, 1776, which is the date Deane finished it. There were several interruptions in his writing, and the section included here, by his own comment in the letter, was written July 20, 1776.
3. There is no further reference to M. Venzonals in the diplomatic correspondence of the period, and it is possible Wharton and Jared Sparks before him, misread Van Zandt.

Precis Prepared for George III of Events Leading to the Expedition Against the Southern Colonies[1]

[Extract] [London, July 21, 1776][2]

Genl Clinton arrived at Cape Fear on the 12th of March, & on the 21st of July Lord George Germain received a Dispatch from him dated in Cape Fear River the 3d May, on which day the Bristol with the rest of The King's Ships arrived there, many of the Transports having got in a few days before.

In this Dispatch General Clinton observes, that had the embarkation taken place at the time appointed, there was great reason to believe that the intentions of Govt would have been answered — That affairs however, had lately much changed for the worse — That the well-affected Inhabitants of the back Settlements had met with a severe check near Moor's Creek, of the particulars of which he had acquainted Mr [John] Pownall by the Cumberland Packet, & of the consequences which followed from it. That he now begged leave to add, that by all the accounts he had since been able to collect, their Chiefs had been imprisoned, & all others who had either taken up Arms, or been suspected, had been disarmed & watched with a most jealous eye — That in this situation he apprehended no immediate success could be expected in No Carolina — & therefore for these reasons, & as they were without horses to convey their cannon, or without water carriage that they could call their own, he was of opinion that an attempt would scarcely be advisable. – That the Province of South Carolina differed very little from that of No Carolina. That the well affected there had been defeated & dispersed. That the reduction of Charles Town would be very difficult; & if effected would contribute but little to the reestablishment of order in that Province, the well affected Inhabitants of which lived all in the interior Country. That with respect to Georgia, the climate alone at that season of the year must render every attempt abortive. That under these Circumstances therefore his views would probably be directed to the Provinces bordering upon Chesapeak Bay, unless called away by orders from Genl Howe, before any thing could be effected. To these observations he adds, that he is of opinion, that any attempt to assemble the friends of Governt in any of the Provinces, without giving it a fair & full trial, would be so far from producing any salutary purposes, that it would only serve to inflame men's minds & sacrifice your friends to the rage & fury of the multitude, & therefore upon this principle, he should proceed warily during the short time it might fall to his Lot to Command in the Southern Provinces.

[Extract] Paris, 21 July 1776

I beg you in the second place, to ask M. de Sartine for his consent, at least tacit, to have cannon cast at the Ruelle forge in Angoumois, on the account of some owners of privateers; this forge, excellent for this purpose, is well situated, and was returned to the King's demesne last October; if it were still in the appanage of the Count d'Artois, I should have had every desirable and suitable facility for these operations, and notably to cast cannon there in the English fashion, under the direction of M. d'Antic, who knows this method better than anyone in Europe, and is in a position to still further improve it.

PHILIP STEPHENS TO VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE[1]

My Lord 23d July 1776

The Diamond, Ambuscade and Unicorn, three of the Ships which I have had the honor to inform your Lordship were to convoy the Transports carrying the 2d Division of Hessians, with the other Reinforcements therein mentioned (except the 16th Regiment of Light Dragoons) put to Sea from Spithead on the 28th of last Month; but were not able to get out of the Channel, the Wind coming strong to the Westward, which obliged them to put into Plymouth where they remain with their Convoy.

The Daphne, which was charged with Convoy of the Transports having on board the 16th Regiment of Light Dragoons, sailed also from Portsmouth the 4h instant, but from the same reason was obliged to put into Torbay, where she remains likewise.

The Adventure, one of the Victuallers which (as I mentioned in my former Letter) was expected to arrive at Spithead in time to sail with the aforesaid Convoy, not succeeding in her Voyage, my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have directed her to proceed under convoy of His Majesty's Ship Perseus; whose Captain is ordered to join your Lordship, and on his arrival put himself under your Command: The like directions are given to the Master of the John, Chambré and Susannah Transports, as they could not be got to Spithead in time to sail with Captain Fielding.

Besides the Victualler and Transports last mentioned, Captain [George Keith] Elphinston takes under his Convoy the Victuallers named in the Margin, loaded with Provisions for supply of the Fleet under your Lordships Command, being part of the second Proportion of four Months for 13,000 Men; and the Grand Duke, Friendship King of Naples and Betsey, having on board the Provisions to complete the aforementioned Proportion, will sail at the same time, if they can be got round before the Perseus sails; but this being uncertain, the Captain is not to wait for them. If there should be any army Victuallers at Spithead, in readiness to sail with Captain Elphinston, he is to take them under Convoy with the Ships abovementioned.

Captain [Richard] Smith of the Lark is ordered to repair to Cork, and take under his Convoy from thence such army Victuallers as may be ready to proceed with him to Halifax, where he is to leave them, unless the Commanding Officer of His Majesty's Land Forces there shall desire him to convoy them to the place where General Howe with the army may be, in which case he is to do so, and then proceed to join your Lordship wherever you may be, and follow your orders for his further proceedings. But if the Victuallers remain at Halifax he is in that case to make the best of his way to join your Lordship and follow your orders as aforesaid.

The Commissioners for the Sick and Hurt Seamen having in consequence of directions they received from my Lords ordered the Medicines, Bedding and other Stores intended for the use of the Naval Hospital in North America to be put on board His Majesty's Hospital Ship, the Jersey, I have thought it necessary (the matter having before escaped my recollection) to inform your Lordship thereof, that if you have not already done it, You may give such orders for the disposal of them as you shall think fit; as also for the disposal of the additional Quantities of Stores and Medicines which the aforementioned Commissioners have provided and which my Lords have ordered to be sent out in the Perseus. I have the honor to be &c

P: S: The Mermaid, which is now at Plymouth, will have orders to proceed to Cork with similar directions to those given to the Captain of the Lark, to sail from thence in 14 days after the departure of the Lark with such of the army Victuallers as may be there ready to accompany her.

Sir: Paris, July 24, 1776.

I have considered the letter you honored me with the 22d, and am of the opinion that your proposals for regulating the prices of goods and stores are just and equitable. The generous confidence you place in the virtue and justice of my constituents affords me the greatest pleasure, and gives me the most flattering prospect of success in the undertaking to their, as well as your, satisfaction, and permit me to assure you the United Colonies will take the most effectual measures to make you remittances, and to justify in every respect the sentiments you entertain of them; but at the same time, as the invoice for clothing only, and without the incident charges, amounts to about two and three millions of livres, and as the cannons, arms, and stores will raise the sum much higher, I cannot, considering the uncertainty of the arrival of vessels during the war, venture to assure you that remittances will be made for the whole within the time proposed; but in that case, as I wrote you before, I hope that the interest on the balance will be satisfactory. With respect to cargoes sent from America either to France or the West Indies, designed as remittances for your advances, I think there can be no objection to their being sent to the address of a house in France, or to your agents where they may arrive.

I find that cannons, arms and other military stores are prohibited and can not be exported but in a private manner; this circumstance gives me many apprehensions, for, as I can not have those things shipped publicly, I can not have them purchased openly without giving alarms, perhaps fatal to our operations. In this case various deceptions and impositions must be practiced. You know that the ambassador of England is attentive to everything done by me, and that his spies watch every motion of mine, and will probably watch the motions of those with whom I am known to be connected. In this situation, and being a stranger in a great measure to your language, I foresee many embarrassments which I know not how to obviate, and such as I fear may greatly perplex even yourself, notwithstanding your superior knowledge and address. Two things, you will agree with me, are as essential as even the procuring of the cannon, arms, etc. First, that they are good and well laid in, and that they be embarked without being stopped and detained. The fate of my country depends, in a great measure, on the arrival of these supplies. I can not, therefore, be too anxious on the subject; nor is there any danger of expense so great but what must be hazarded, if necessary, to effect so capital and important an object. I pray you to consider this subject, and to give me your thoughts upon it. I called on you this morning, with Dr. Bancroft, to have conversed with you on this subject, but found that you was gone to Versailles. Permit me to urge your early attention to this subject, and to assure you that I have the honor to be with the highest respect Yours, sir, etc.,

No. 53 Paris July 24th 1776

My Lord On Monday Night I received the Honour of yr Lordships Letters Nos 26 and 27.

As it is natural that this Court, tho' they may not desire the Independency of America, should wish, that the Reduction of it may cost us dear, and must therefore be disposed, to connive at least, at any assistance the Rebels can draw from hence, I keep that object constantly in view, and collect the best secret Information I can, without betraying any suspicion, or Mistrust.

I am assured that there are several french adventurers, who attempt to supply the Rebels with arms and amunition. They clear out for Africa, and sometimes go to North America, sometimes meet American Vessels at Sea.

I have heard it said that Monsieur de Chaumont, a Man of Rank and Fortune in this Country,[2] is secretly engaged in these Enterprizes, which are winked at here. Messrs. Gerner and Viars Merchts at Bourdeaux, have sent lately, two thousand eight hundred Barrels of Gunpowder to Martinico; In January last Gunpowder Sold there, for Six Livres a Pound.

I am told, that Gradiz a Jew Merchant at Bordeaux, sends under French Colours, Powder, Arms, &c. to North America and it is pretended, has got Permits from this Court.

The Result of the best enquiry I have been able to make with regard to the American Gentleman, who called himself Nathan Rumsey is, as follows.—

He staid here but three or four days, had an interview with Monsieur de Mazieres, a Farmer General, to make an offer of supplying la Ferme [Farmers General] with Tobacco from America, but met with no Success, His offer was absolutely rejected. He had frequent interviews with a Banker here, called Grand[3] but what Business he transacted, or attempted to transact there, I do not Know. He is now gone to Nantes, in company with a Monsr Penet, a Considerable German Merchant and his Cousin; from Nantes he goes to Bordeaux, and Marseilles, in order to establish a Correspondence with Some of the principal Merchants there, and it is Said, means to return to Paris in about a Month.

I have not discovered that Rumsey ever went to Versailles tho' this Penet with whom he is intimately connected has I am told several acquaintances there. Another informer tells me, that Rumsey had an American Companion, but this I doubt, as I know there was no such Person Lodged with him, I am assured that he arrived at Bordeaux on board a small Sloop of twenty five Tun, carrying ten Guns, and neatly painted white and Red, which waits there to carry him back to America.

There is a Physician here, called Barbeux du Bourg who is in regular Correspondence with Doctor Franklin, and who helps to circulate all those Reports to our Disadvantage, which are so greedily received by the Wishings, and Coffee house Politicians, of this Country, who are always loudest, when they talk of what they least understand

I am with great truth and Respect My Lord [&c.]

LORD WEYMOUTH TO LORD STORMONT[1]

No 29. St James's 26 July 1776

My Lord I cannot avoid making mention to Your Excellency of the Armament carrying on at the several Ports of France rather from the great Importance of the subject than from any thing new I can have to say thereupon. Your Excellency's Attention is directed to that Point and you will not fail to transmit to me every thing you can collect that may tend to explain the Intention of the french Court.

I transmit to Your Excellency herewith an Edict of His most Faithful Majesty with respect to any American Vessel that may put into the Harbours of Portugal.[2] It is unnecessary to apprize you that it would be very desirable that something similar should be done at the Court where you reside, but as in the present situation of Affairs it would not be expedient to receive a refusal to any application on that subject, I must wholly leave the matter to your Discretion, not doubting that you will use the most proper means to try the practicability of a Measure that would be important at the present crisis. I am &c.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

My Lord, London, 26 July 1776

You will see from the List enclosed herewith of the Crews presently on board the Guardships that they come to a total of 4,948 men who are quite unequally divided since there are ships with more than 400 men and others that do not have enough to man their boats. To tell the truth, only those in Chatham are in this situation because the port is the least exposed. Among the others we can see two with crews of 500 men. You will remember, My lord, that these two ships had been cruising off the Azores in order to intercept American vessels following the intelligence brought by the ship from Philadelphia taken by treason to Bristol by her crew.[2] They stopped several Vessels which they met during their cruise but they did not capture any. These two ships will return to the other Guardships the detachments they had drawn from them in order to be able to put to sea.

We receive intelligence from all the Ports that Sailors are so rare that they cannot be found in spite of the extraordinary inducements offered by the Government, and that most of those who are on the Register of Seamen are land people, so that out of the 4,948 hardly a third are true sailors. However if we consider this total as an effective number and compare it to what is required in order to complete the commissioning of these 20 Ships in time of war, we see that 9,000 men are still lacking. Thus, My lord, the greatest advantage to England in having these Guardships on the present footing, is to have always available 20 seaworthy ships which by the detachments they can provide put her in a position occasionally to put a few Ships to Sea on a day's notice, and to have, if need be, a fleet ready to sail in a short time by means of an impressment.

They are busy training the men they receive in order to provide trained crews to the Frigates that put to Sea. Thus, we cannot consider that they are on stable footing today. But we must not conceal from ourselves that this is a useful establishment which deserves to be imitated.

Captain [James] Cook sailed from Plymouth on the 18th of this month for his new journey to Otahitee, new Zealand, and from there to the Coast of California from whence he will look for a passage to the Pole. The ship which is to follow him is still in Plymouth.

We still have not received any news concerning the military operations in America. Lord How arrived in Halifax on the 25th of June with his single ship and he was to sail without delay to rejoin the General his brother who had left on the 10th of the same month.

The Board of Trade received intelligence today that American Privateers captured nine richly loaded ships from the West Indies, namely, 3 from Jamaica and 6 from Nevis, Antigua and the Barbados. This piece of news is so unquestionable that the cost of Insurance went up from 5 to 15 p. 100. A Ship arrived in Bristol from Jamaica and confirmed the capture by two Spanish coast-guard ships of M. Irwin's vessel. I am with respect &ca.

M. Garnier to Vergennes[1]

[Extract] London, 26 July 1776

The Second Hessian division finally left Plymouth on the 23rd of this month with the pack-horses. They will be convoyed by the Frigates Diamond, Unicorn and Ambuscade. The Frigate Lark sailed from Portsmouth on the 24th with two transports carrying recruits and ammunition. This frigate has one hundred thousand pounds Sterling to pay the troops in America. Well, nothing can distract them from their purpose and it is easy to see that they intend to impose their rule.

You probably know, My lord, about the decree passed in Portugal on the 4th of this month to close all trade in that country to the Americans. It may be presumed that if they had had to supply a number of islands in the vicinity of the American Continent, they would not have come to such a decision which will bring them a dangerous enemy without increasing the number of their friends. . . .

. . . It is one thing or the other, either the Americans are still English, or they no longer are. In the first case it is not for us to make any distinction between them, nor for England to prescribe to us whom we must admit and whom we must exclude. In the second case, the Americans are the enemy of England and we are a neutral power. Shall we say that they are pirates? They do not commit any acts of piracy against us and it is up to us to decide how we should treat them.

This, My lord, is the legal aspect of the situation, unless I am mistaken. If we proceed from there to our political interests, we will probably find that it is essential for us to weaken a Power which claims sovereignty over three parts of the world and, after appropriating the empire of the Sea to itself, applies tyrannical methods to trade.* It is no less than a matter of breaking the British Power in half. M. de Montesquieu believed that making Ireland independent was the only way to achieve this. He could not have foreseen what is about to happen. Never perhaps has a more important event offered itself to the speculations of France. The essential thing is not to fail without disturbing the peace of the other States, if it is possible. The Ministry that will be able to fulfill this double goal will deserve well of the country and will receive the homage of posterity.

A few days ago, one of the American supporters asked me this question with respect to which you had requested some information from me, My lord. He claims that the Americans are getting ready to put many ships to sea during the next winter and would like to know if they can leave in safety in our ports the prizes which they might capture. I replied that this matter was new and that I could not yet give an answer.

*N[ote] To give you an idea, My lord, of the manner in which these people think and express themselves, it might be useful to offer you quite a recent example. The other day, Lord North was speaking of the Dutch in front of me and was turning their ambition into ridicule as they place themselves on the same footing with England and say we maritime Powers. It is, Lord North added, like the story of the shoemaker who lived next door to the Lord Mayor and said my neig[h]bor and I. Lord Barrington often told me that we could not become a maritime Power and that the more money we spent to achieve this goal, the more he would be pleased being certain that the money will be wasted. I asked him once upon what he based such a strange opinion while speaking of a Power which has an important trade, a large population and Coasts extending along both Seas from Dunkerque to Antibes. He always persisted in his assertion, refusing to reveal his secret.

Capt. [Christopher] Stephenson arrived in town yesterday, and gives us the following account of the capture of his ship the Lady Juliana, from Jamaica to London, in company with the Reynolds, Capt. [Keylock] Rusden, from ditto for ditto, and the Juno, Capt. [Samuel] Marsden, from ditto, for Bristol. "On the 9th and 12th of May last they were attacked by two American privateers off the Matanzas, bearing S.S.E. and that the Reynolds, Rusden, was taken by the American privateer [Congress], Capt. Henry [sic George McAroy], mounting six three pounders, and ten swivels, on the 9th of May; and Lady Juliana, Stevenson, and Juno, Marsden, were taken by the Chance, Capt. [John] Adams, who mounted four six pounders, and ten swivels, the 12th; that the Provincials put the captains and passengers on board a Spanish vessel that was leaky, who carried them into [New] Providence, where the captains purchased a vessel, called the Baltimore, which is since arrived at Plymouth."[2]

The amount of the cargoes of the prizes lately taken by the American privateers, we are informed, is equal to the sum of 140,000 l.

Capt. Williamson, of the Frances, who was taken with the Jamaica ships by the Provincial privateers, was told while on board her, that several privateers were cruizing in the Gulph and windward passage for the homeward bound Jamaica ships.[3]

1. The American privateers, taking these six vessels, were the Revenge, a Massachusetts sloop, Captain Joseph White, and Montgomery, a Rhode Island sloop, Captain Daniel Bucklin.
2. The captors of the Lady Juliana, Reynolds and Juno, were Pennsylvania privateer sloops.
3. The Frances had been taken by the Revenge and Montgomery, but was released, "being a Guineaman, in Ballast, and since arrived at Dover," Public Advertiser, London, July 27, 1776.

Silas Deane to the Committee of Secret Correspondence[1]

[Extract] [Paris, July 27, 1776][2].

Mons. Chaumont, a very wealthy person, and intendant for providing clothes, etc. for the French army, has offered me a credit on account of the Colonies to the amount of one million of livres, which, I have accepted. I have in treaty another credit, which joined to this, will purchase the articles directed in my instructions; the credit will be until May next, before which I hope remittances will be made. I have purchased of said M. Chaumont a quantity of saltpeter at ten sous, or five and one-fourth per cent., in order that Captain Morgan might not return empty.

As soon as I have given the orders for dispatching him and settled some other matters here I design for Dunkirk, to ship the Indian goods, which I hope may arrive in season for the winter supply, though I leave you to consider my situation, with only about six or seven thousand pounds to complete a contract of forty, and the bills for my private expenses being protested, obliged to support myself out of that capital, which I labor to do with all the economy in my power. Dr. Bancroft is returned to London, and by him I wrote to Monsieur Garnier, and agreed on a mode of correspondence. I think your remittances in armed vessels will be much the best method, and I have ordered Captain Morgan's sloop to be armed; and should she arrive safe, recommend him as one I am confident will serve the Colonies with great zeal and fidelity; and I have had some experience of the goodness of his temper and his abilities. Mr. Seymour, his mate, is also deserving of encouragement as a good seaman and of undaunted resolution. I am not without hopes of obtaining liberty for the armed vessels of the United Colonies to dispose of their prizes in the ports of this kingdom, and also for arming and fitting out vessels of war directly from hence; but I will not venture on this until I see what effect my last memoir may have, the substance of which is to show the danger to France and Spain if they permit Great Britain to keep so enormous a force in America and to recover the dominion of the Colonies; also how fully it is in their power to prevent it, and by that means deprive Great Britain of the principal source of her wealth and force, even without hazarding a war of any consequence in point of danger.

This memoir, which takes several sheets, I am unable to send you a copy of, as I have no one to assist me, and must make out several copies for the persons to whom they are to be delivered. I was directed to apply for arms and clothes for twenty-five thousand men, and for one hundred field pieces, with ammunition and stores in proportion. This I wished to get of the ministry direct, but they evaded it, and I am now in treaty for procuring them, through the agency of Monsieur Chaumont and Monsieur Beaumarchais, on a credit of eight months from the time of their delivery. If I effect this, as I undoubtedly shall, I must rely on the remittances being made this fall and winter without fail, or the credit of the Colonies must suffer. If I can get the arms out of the magazines and the field pieces here I hope for a much longer credit; but if we send to Sweden for the brass cannon, the credit will not be lengthened beyond that. Some new improvements have lately been made in this branch, consequently the cannon now manufactured will be preferable to those of former construction. Some engineers here assert that iron is preferable to brass—that is, wrought iron—out of which the pieces may be made lighter and to a better purpose. Considering the want of these pieces and the plenty of iron in America, the experiment might, I think, be made without delay. I am still in hopes of procuring an admission of the article of tobacco directly from America, but the Farmers General will not offer equivalent to the risk.

Without intelligence from April to this time leaves me quite uncertain and extremely anxious about the line of conduct now pursuing by Congress, and consequently, I cannot, without further intelligence and instructions, proceed in my negotiations either with safety or honor. The resolution of Congress of the 15th of May is not considered by the ministry as a declaration of independence, but only a previous step, and until this decisive step is taken I can do little more to any purpose. This taken, I dare pledge myself the United Colonies may obtain all the countenance and assistance they wish for in the most open and public manner and the most unlimited credit with the merchants of this kingdom. I must, therefore, urge this measure, if not already taken, and that the declaration be in the most full and explicit terms.

Merchants here would speculate deeply in the American trade could they be insured at any premium within bounds. I wish to know if offices are already open, and I would suggest that if the Congress would take the insurance under their own direction, it would give it such a proportionably greater credit, that supplies would most certainly be obtained in plenty. I shall be able to secure a private interview with the Spanish ambassador and shall present him my memorial, and am in a train which I think will carry it quite to the fountain head.

Thus I have in a minute, possibly a tedious, detail mentioned every thing material on my mind which has occurred since my arrival, and submit the whole to the wisdom and candor of the honorable Congress, observing that I have gone to the extent of my instructions, and though I have been successful beyond my expectations, yet I have but been laboring principally to set certain great wheels in motion, which still want something more decisive on my part, and I am confident of all that is wanting to set them so effectually moving as to roll the burden and calamities of war from our doors back with aggravated ruin on its authors, which, if I can be the means of effecting, the world may bestow the rest of its honors on whom it pleases; I shall be contented, the extent of my most ambitious hopes thus accomplished.

. . . M. Dubourg has continued to render me every assistance in his power; to be particular would swell this letter beyond all bounds. His abilities and connections are of the first style in this kingdom, and his zeal for the cause of the United Colonies is to be described only by saying that at times it is in danger of urging him beyond both; in short, I am every way deeply indebted to him personally for bringing me acquainted with agreeable persons of rank and character, and on account of my honored constituents for assisting me to make such a favorable beginning and progress in my business. I know not how affluent he may be, but as he has really for some time devoted himself to assist in this negotiation, I am confident something honorable will be thought of for him. I have complimented him by asking of him his portrait to be sent to his and my friends in America in my private capacity, mentioning our mutual friend Dr. Franklin. This I found so agreeable, that I am confident some such distinction would be more acceptable than more lucrative rewards. Dr. B[ancroft]. took pains to collect all the political publications of the last year for me and brought them with him; he was at considerable expense in his journey; I sent him from Bordeaux a bill of thirty pounds and paid his expenses in my lodgings here. At parting I desired him to keep an account, and when the money was expended to inform me. This gentleman is certainly capable of giving as good, if not the best, intelligence of any man in Great Britain, as he is closely connected with the most respectable of the minority in both houses, not particularly obnoxious to the majority, and for his abilities, they are too well known to Dr. Franklin to need any attempt to do them justice in a letter. . . .

ARTHUR LEE TO SILAS DEANE[1]

[Extract] [London] July 28th

. . . It seems necessary to me that we shoud have an interview to settle a plan with more safety than can be done by Letter, even in Cypher. For this purpose I woud come to you immediately, but that it being now in the middle of our Law Circuit, my quitting it abruptly woud be remarkd. That will be over the 10th of next month; when I will set out to meet you, unless you shoud think it improper. I have inclosed you a Cypher for greater safety, & beg you will answer me as soon as possible inclosing it to Mr Alderman [William] Lee No 33 great tower Hill, London. If you have no objection to my coming, be so good as to hire for me a convenient private Lodging near you, to be enterd the 15th of the month & continued in weekly. Let me know the House, street & Quarter, that I may drive to it immediately because enquiries are always made about those who come to the Hotels. I woud have it taken in the name of Mr Jackson. I beg too that you will mention precisely where you lodge, that I may find you without inquiries which are dangerous.

Permit me to warn you against any communication whatsoever with english, Scots or Americans, here or with you, until you are very well assurd of their characters, & with the middle of the three never. . . .

If you should have an opportunity of writing to — before I see you, caution them against Sir James Jay, Dennis DeBardt, Mr [John] Langdon formerly Delegate from N. Hampshire, Paul Wentworth, & William Molleson a Maryland Mercht with whom Mr [Matthew] Tilghman, a Delegate for Maryland corresponds without knowing that his intelligence goes directly to Administration. Col. Mercer too, who is always with ministerial people shoud not be trusted. I have good reason to fear that Joseph Reed in Philadelphia is a dangerous man. In these times it is necessary to obstain from trusting those of whom there is the least suspicion. The Scale is coming so near to a ballance, that a little treachery may turn it to our destruction, & the ruin of public Liberty.

LETTER FROM PLYMOUTH[1]

[Extract] July 28

I send this purposely to inform you, that this Morning arrived here a Coaster, the Master of which declares, that Yesterday he met with a Topsham Pilot-boat, who told him, that between the Start and Torbay he met with an American Privateer, mounting twelve Carriage Guns, spread a great deal of Canvas, full of Men, and is painted Black. He asked the Pilot many Questions; and among the rest, what East or West Indiamen were expected. When I first heard it, I did not believe it, but sent a Person to the Captain of the Coaster, who confirmed the above Account, so that I believe it true, and would have you make it public at Lloyd's, &c.

Public Advertiser, MONDAY, JULY 29, 1776

London, July 29.

The nine English Ships, mentioned in Saturday's Paper, were all taken by two Provincial Privateers, with the greatest Ease, after they had been convoyed 150 Leagues from the Ports they respectively sailed from, and left by the Men of War under a Supposition that they were totally out of Danger. The privateers which took them were but thinly manned, and weakly armed. One carried ten and the other twelve Guns. Several of the Ships had a greater Number, but (which is very extraordinary) no Powder on board, the Governors of the Places they sailed from not allowing any to be shipped for fear enough should not remain with them to defend their Situations in Case of an Attack, which was something more than probable.[1]

A petition is preparing by the West India Merchants, to be laid before the Admiralty, praying there Lordships to appoint Cruizers and Convoys for the better Protection of their Trade.

The certain advice received on Friday of nine sail of ships being taken by the American privateers, have raised the insurance on all Jamaica ships, and ships from the West-India islands 20 per cent. more than it was before; and many of the underwriters even refuse to enter their names on a policy; for they look upon it a very hazardous venture, as there are a vast number of privateers out to intercept our homeward bound West-India ships.

1. There were ten vessels named, and this refers to the seven taken by the privateers Revenge, 12, and Montgomery, 10 guns.

London Gazette, SATURDAY, JULY 27 TO TUESDAY, JULY 30, 1776

Admiralty-Office [London], July 30.

By Letters received from Captain Douglas, of His Majesty's Ship Isis, dated at Quebec the 26th and 27th of last Month, it appears, That immediately after raising the Siege of Quebec, of which he gave an Account in his Letters of the 8th and 15th of May, every proper Measure was taken to facilitate the farther Operations against the Rebels, by sending down the River all the Pilots which could be procured to bring up the Transports that were daily expected with General Burgoyne from England and Ireland; and, that no Time might be lost on their Arrival, he had provided Pilots for the upper River, and placed Frigates and Armed Vessels in proper Stations to assist and escort them; and also, lest the Transports should be prevented by contrary Winds from sailing up the River, he had stationed Vessels with Provisions at proper Places, for the Use of the Troops, if they should be obliged to disembark and march by Land. By these Dispositions, all the Transports with Troops which had Pilots on Board, proceeded up the River without stopping at Quebec, and arrived at Three Rivers Time enough to defeat the Rebels, and afterwards drive them from St. John's and all their Posts below Lake Champlain. Captain Douglas in the same Letter says, that the prudent and spirited Behaviour of Captain [Henry] Harvey, of the Martin Sloop, cannot be too much commended; and that the Zeal, Vigour, and Unanimity, of His Majesty's Servants on both Elements were scarcely equalled on any other Occasion within his Remembrance. He also writes that he was, in Concert with General Carleton, considering upon a proper Establishment for Armed Vessels to be employed on the Lakes Champlain and Ontario, and in contriving the most expeditious Means of getting them, with other Craft on the said Lakes, in order to the better accelerating the Passage of the Army; and that Captain Harvey, of the Martin, was returning to Sorel, in order to examine into the Means of floating between Camels (as is practised in Russia and Holland) through the Rapids of Chamble into Lake Champlain, the Six Armed Vessels, one of which was already arrived from England, and the others hourly expected.

By a Letter received from Vice-Admiral Young, dated at Antigua the 31st of May last, it appears, that Captain [Henry] Bryne, of His Majesty's Ship the Hind, which had been sent on Service to St. Augustine in the Province of Georgia, having Intelligence that the Rebels were fitting Armed Vessels in the adjacent Rivers, and being at Anchor off Sunbury River, he ordered Lieutenant [Alexander] Ellis, of the Hinchinbrooke Armed Schooner, with the ship's Tender and Boats, mann'd and arm'd, to proceed over the Bar, where they set on Fire a Brig that was loading, and a Ship on the Stocks, intended by the Rebels for a Privateer to carry 20 Guns. It further appears from the Admiral's aforementioned Letter, that since the Account transmitted in his Letter of the 3d of March, and published in the Ga- zette of the 8th of last Month, the Cruizers under his Command had seized Seventeen more Ships and Vessels, either belonging to or employed in carrying on a Trade with His Majesty's Rebellious Subjects in North America.

PENET & PLIARNE TO SILAS DEANE[1]

Nantes, 30 July 1776.

Sir, I could not sooner send you the enclosed samples of the same cloth which I have sent to the Continent. I can deliver one hundred thousand ells of this material in different colors at 5#.[2] 6#. 7# per ell in French money. You will not be able to judge the quality and beauty of this cloth from the samples alone, but they will show you the colors.

We have also twenty thousand wool blankets available from 4# to 6# each.

I can supply you with all the items and I assure you that you cannot expect such good quality, low prices and immediate service from anyone else in Europe but our firm.

I have just made arrangements for guns. I can send you 30 thousand for 12# or 13# apiece, similar to those which I have sent to the Congress and which are quite reliable. Again, I renew my offers to be of service and I hope, Sir, that you will have enough confidence in our Nantes firm to give it the preference of your trade, since we are already trusted by the Continent and we have six vessels directed to our firm sailing for the account of private persons from the Northern provinces and which we are going to load with such articles.

I have received orders to have uniforms made for the regiments of some provinces, which I shall do immediately.

If you wish to deal with our Nantes firm for your supplies, I beg you to let me know by the first mail so that I may make other arrangements if it is not convenient for you. Two ships are to get under way any time and if you wish to have a few things sent there, I beg you to let me know.

In Bordeaux, our office is in the hands of Recules de Basmarin & Raimbaux. My associate M Gruel wrote to them. They will have the honour to offer you their services. You can trust them fully. It is a wealthy firm in that city.

Allow me, Sir, to warn you about the Irish and Scottish firms in Bordeaux, or any other places in the kingdom. I have good ground for complaining about them. They are our worst enemies.

I am also advising you that I refused the guns which you saw in Paris. They tried to deceive me and make me pay twice as much for them as they are worth. It is scandalous: they wanted them to be loaded without allowing me to see them. But I did not do it and refused them. It would have been disloyal and deceitful to the Congress if I had shipped such weapons. I have a factory which supplies me with as many as I want and which charges me half as much for much better weapons. I have the honor to be with the most sincere consideration, Sir, [&c.]

A private Letter from Philadelphia, which came by the Way of Ireland, says, that the General Congress have sent Agents to Genoa, and other Ports, to purchase Ships of War from 40 to 80 Guns;[1] and have ordered, in every Port they have, large Ships to be built as fast as possible, as they intend next Spring to have a very powerful Fleet.

1. Appearance of this fanciful item undoubtedly prompted the following spurious paragraph, which appeared in the Public Advertiser, London, on August 2:

> The following is taken from a Letter received by a Merchant in the City, which came by the Way of France from Philadelphia, dated June 1. 'The 28th ult. arrived in this Port three Ships Genoese built, which mounted 64, 56, and 48 Guns each. They are named the Defence, Cumberland, and Supreme. Each Vessel is provided with close Quarters, and boarding Nets, &c.'

We beg you will acquaint the Rt Hble the Lords Commissrs of the Admiralty, that the Ship Zachary Bailly from Jamaica bound to London, and Creighton from Antigua for America (with Rum for the Use of His Majesty's Forces) whereof we were Masters, was taken by the Privateer Yankey [Yankee] of Boston, Henry Johnson Commander, of Nine four Pounders, Sixteen Swivels and forty three Men; the former was taken the [blank] June in Lat: 29°. 54. No Longe. 70°. 30 W. the latter the 26th of the same Month in Lat: 31°. 00 Longe in 68°. 30 W. —

We were taken on board the Yankey with eight of Our Crews, with Mr Rd Rouse Master's Mate & three Seamen belonging to His Majts Ship Experiment, who had been Passengers in the Creighton & a few days after parted Company with the Prizes, each to make the best of their way to some Port in the Massachusets Bay. But on the 3d of July then in Lat: 36°. 40 N. & Long 65.00 W. We embraced a favorable opportunity to seize Capt Johnson & the Centinels upon the Quarter Deck, and with the assistance of Our People got Command of the Deck without Bloodshed; Immediately after taking the Vessel discovered two Sloops in chace of us, which we suppose were American Privateers, being greatly inferior in number to the Prisoners on board & unable to fight all our Guns, declined an Engagement & bore away for England.

We cannot help expressing our apprehension, about the safety of the Jamaica Ships, having seen several American Cruizers in their track.

Upon our arrival in London shall Personally wait upon you to be Honored with their Lordships Commands relative to the Privateer & her Crew, they act under the Commission of the President of their Congress; The Flag a Pine tree in a White Field, with the Inscription Appeal to Heaven. "Extract of a letter from Dover, July 31."[1]

The Zachary Bayley, from Jamaica for London; and the Creighton, from Antigua, with rum for the army, were taken by the Yankee privateer, Captain Johnson, carrying nine four pounders, 16 swivels, and 43 men. The prizes were sent to New England, and the masters together with a midshipman of the Experiment man of war, who was a passenger, and eleven seamen, were taken on board the privateer. On the third of July they seized the privateer, without bloodshed, and have brought her to Dover. They were chased by two sloops, whom they imagined to be American privateers, but durst not engage them because of the number of prisoners they had on board.

Captain Johnson (the American commander of the privateer) complained of the illiberal treatment he received, by being insulted frequently while at sea, calling him by the most opprobrious names, and threatening him with the cruellest and most savage punishments, and also for suffering many people to come on board after the privateer arrived in the river, to insult him in the grossest terms, though he was then a prisoner; and when his brother came to see him, after a three years absence, they were not permitted to talk together one minute in private.

The prisoners on board the Yankee privateer, having petitioned not to be close confined, but that they might be put to some employment, upon which it was agreed that they should be placed on board the guardships. The vessel was afterwards ordered to be sold, and the money to be given to the captors.

Lord Stormont to Lord Weymouth[1]

No 57 Paris July 31. 1776

My Lord As great Latitude is left me, in the Execution of the orders transmitted me, in Yr Lordships Letter No 29,[2] and as the Business is of considerable Nicety, as well as Importance, I will venture to state to Your Lordship, what has occurred to me upon it, after turning it much in Thoughts, and weighing it with all the Attention I can. — The objections to an unfavourable answer, are too obvious to be dwelt upon, and that in the present moment, we should receive such an answer as we wish, is more than I can bring myself to expect; Besides the desire, this Court naturally have, to protract the American War, till it waste our strength and Treasure, which desire, must make them averse to anything, that tends to damp the Hopes of the Rebels, They think My Lord, that France is a Gainer, by the Trade, she is beginning to carry on with America, and in a great commercial, and Natural View, would as much wish to wound the Act of Navigation, as we must always wish, to keep that valuable act entire. To strengthen this general reasoning, I must add, that I have been, more than once, informed, that the leading Opinion in the french Cabinet is, that they should give us friendly Professions, but should avoid any Step, that can tend to discourage the Rebels; that they should in a Word, lie by, wait the event, and take Council from it. I have been informed too, that the giving a declaration in writing, that they would not suffer the Rebels, to be supplied with Ammunition, was by some of the french King's Ministers, considered as an oversight. — Your Lord Ship remembers, that, that Declaration was given me, upon my first shewing M de Vergennes, an Office Ld Grantham[3] had past to M Grimaldi,[4] and that Ministers answer to his Lordship; and then, passing an office of a Simular Nature, and conceived almost in the same Words. Perhaps My Lord, the same Method Might Succeed again. If Spain, whose Trade with the American Rebels, is much less Considerable, than that of France, could be brought to give such a Prohibition, as Portugal has given; this Court might perhaps in that case, be induced to follow the Example of their Ally; tho they would, I doubt, not follow that, of a Court so closely connected with us as Portugal, who must consider our Prosperity, as inseparable from her own.

I can assure Your Lordship, that the Naval Preparations, carrying on in the Different Ports of France, are as they ought to be, the object of my Constant attention. I am not at present, able to add any thing very Material, to the Accounts I have already sent you. The Intelligence, which I gave your Lordship by the last Messenger, and gave it as very doubtful, I am now convinced is Not true. No orders have been given, to slacken these Preparations, The more probable opinion is, that they have been quickened — Upon the first arrival of the News from Spain, Monsr D'Aranda,[5] as I am positively assured, went both to Monsieur de Maurepas, and M. de Sartines, and insisted Strongly, upon the Necessity of carrying on all these naval Preparations with double Vigour, and pressed much for orders to be sent to the different Ports.

It seems to me very doubtful, whether his Request was complied with. I have been again informed, from pretty good authority, that he held the Language I mentioned in my Letter No 55, He has since changed his Tune, and now says, that M de Maurepas, and he, reasoned differently at first, but that at last, that Minister came over to his Opinion; But this Language may be artificial. — I am inclined to think My Lord, that if any orders were sent in consequence of his application, it was only par Maniere d'acquit, and that this Portugal Business, has made no alteration in the Plan of this Court which is, to go on with these Preparations, as fast as the funds, allotted for that service, will permit. There must, as I have already observed to Yr Lordship, soon be a Diminution, of the Activity with which they are carried on, unless the four additional Millions, M de Sartines demands, can be found. This will be the more difficult, as their Treasury is certainly at a low Ebb at present, and no body imagines, that M Clugny's Management will increase the Revenue.

There are Letters from the Neighbourhood of Toulon which say, that the Preparations there, are carrying on with uncommon Activity; upon the strength of these Letters, and of the Reports that are so prevalent here, (where War has been much talked of, since the first News from Spain) a foreign Minister, with whom I am very intimate, spoke to M de Vergennes Yesterday, and pressed him home — He said, "That in Consequence, of what His Excellency had been pleased to tell him some time ago, He had assured his Court, that the present sentiments of France, were perfectly pacific; and that the Naval Preparations she was making had no hostile View, But that now, that he heard so much, from various Quarters, of the Activity, and Vigour, with which these Preparations were carrying on, He took the Liberty to ask him again, whether they were going to make any Armament. He added, that he had no Right to expect to be let into Secrets, but that armaments could not long be concealed, and he was persuaded His Excellency had too much friendship for him, to expose him to the disgrace, of giving his Court false Information, upon so essential a Point."] M de Vergennes answered him, with every appearance of openess, and Sincerity, begged him, not to credit the Reports of Paris, which would certainly mislead him, said, that what they were doing in their Ports, should not be called "des Preparatifs", c'etoit seulement des Mesures de Sureté, et de Prevoiance.["] He added, that he was very sensible, that any armament, in the present Moment, would give an Alarm, but assured him most positively, that no armament was making, no armament was intended.

What adds Credit to these assurances, for the Truth of which, both M. Maurepas and M. de Vergennes, have repeatedly pledged themselves, is, the moderation with which they have certainly acted, in this Portugal Business. Such Conduct is, I think, a strong Earnest of their pacific Intentions, had they meant or wished a War, they would have inflamed, instead of Mollifying the Resentment of Spain. Tho' I think it my Duty, to state things exactly as I see them, and upon that principle, represent the present French Ministry, as friends to Peace, Yet I am very far from meaning to say any thing, that could tend, to lull us into security, having ever been persuaded, that our only real Safety, against such a Rival who will always wish, if she does not Meditate Revenge, is, that which we derive from our own Vigilance, and superior Naval Strength. I am with great truth and regard My Lord [&c.]

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London, 2 August 1776

You know, My lord, that Lord Weymouth mentioned our armaments only once and without pressing the matter. The more lightly he treated this matter, the more concerned he was, as I realized. Since then, he did not mention it to me any more. The other Ministers never spoke to me about it. Silence in such delicate matters is always suspicious; consequently I am more attentive than ever to all the movements of the English Navy. I had the honor to inform you previously that four Line of Battle Ships had been newly commissioned to serve as Guardships; orders have been given for six more to be commissioned for the same purpose, to wit, the Sandwich, 90, and St. Alban, 64, for Portsmouth; the Queen, 90, and the Bienfaisant, 64, for Plymouth; the Prince George, 90, and the Augusta, 64, for Chatham. A large quantity of cables, masts and rigging are being sent to Halifax. Three new Frigates are building. Finally, we have intelligence from Plymouth that the Belleisle of 64 is destined for the East Indies; that the Sloop Spy which was brought to this port by Sailors belonging to the Yachts in Deptford, formed her crew with detachments from Guardships with the addition of 20 Marines, and that she sailed on the 25th of last month for Newfoundland. You will also recall, My lord, the information I had the honor to send you with respect to 50 Vessels being furnished with arms to transport supplies to America. The Government also purchased a large Vessel called Union from the India Company. She received the name of Elephant and is being equipped with 16 guns to sail for America.

I can only see one reason behind all these maritime preparations. They are preparing here a large armament in case it should be needed. Among the Ships being brought to seaworthy condition, two are in want of repair and will necessarily require time. Furthermore, men are needed for their crews, and at the moment they are in America. Thus, this fleet should not be ready to put to sea before the end of this year, and this only with the help of an impressment. But if it should take place on any pretext, the most sudden and vigorous course on our part, My lord, if I may express my opinion, is that which will ensure our safety.

. . . But of all these preparations, I must confess that I [am] most concerned with the least noticeable one. I am speaking of the expedition of the Sloop Spy to Newfoundland. The Squadron which is cruising in that Sea left a long time ago and I cannot imagine why this Ship should be sent at this time. But our weak condition in this part of the world, the importance for England to get hold of our best sailors early at the beginning of a war, the ease with which it can be done and our unfortunate experience in the past will always give me great cause to worry. It may be also that our Correspondent in Plymouth is ill-informed because the Office of the Navy indicated her destination as America. I am doing my best to find out the truth about the destination of this Sloop and the real purpose of her mission.[2]

I should have sent this off earlier, but delayed on account of hearing something more directly, if I might depend on certain articles for which I was in treaty; I am now assured I may, and the whole will be ready to ship in all the month of October. My next labor will be to obtain a convoy, which I do not despair of, though it is a delicate question, and I have only sounded at a distance, yet I have no doubt of obtaining one, at least off the coast of Europe, and the articles will be shipped as for the West India Islands. I propose arming and well manning the vessels in which these articles shall be embarked, and I advise again the sending all remittances to Europe in armed vessels. The probability of meeting with English merchants is well worth the risk. I hope that it will be considered that one hundred field pieces, and arms, clothing, and accoutrements, with military stores for twenty-five thousand men, is a large affair; and that, although I am promised any credit, yet as they must be paid for, the sooner the better, if to be done without too great a risk.

A considerable part of these articles are now on hand, and orders are issued for the others by the contractors this day. I prefer Bordeaux to any other port for shipping them from, but the remittances must be made to several, on which I will give you my opinion in my next.

We have the Honour to write you by Capn Crawford of Rhode Island that Mr [Nicholas] Brown of Providence consign'd to us at Nants, whoom we have dispatched with a Cargo of Powder Muskets salt peter &ca, who promis'd to deliver you this.

View of the Port of Bordeaux.

I had the honour to inform you in May last at my arrival in Europe of the success of my opperations, and of the advantageous dispositions I met with, now I will inform you have embarked in your ship the Hancock a Cargo of Muskets Saltpeter Powder Tin Lead &ca amounting to 60 or 70 thousand Livers, which sum only M. Schweighauzer could pay us. We are forced Sir to acquaint you that all the Houses you have in spain and Portugal use you very Ill and make no remittances to Nantes, we have now in our stores Goods ready to send you to the amount of Forty thousand Guineas, but two of your Ships have arrived here from Cadiz in Ballast one is the Hancok and the other the Adams, the last brought no money, We askd Mr Schweighauzer if he would answer for the Cargo which we were desirous to deliver to the Capn on his paying us when he should have money of yours in his hands, he told us he could not take that on himself. notwithstanding Sir as we have the greatest Confidence in you and the Honourable Congress, we shall immediatly dispatch this Vessell with a Cargo of Ammunition, provided however we can obtain from Manufactorers, the credit we require, and we beg you will send us remittances by the first oppertunity, we request it less on our own Account than by the desire we have of serving so respectable a Nation as yours, you may depend on our willingness to do every thing in our Power for your assistance.

I have seen Mr Dean formerly a Member of your secret Committy as well as Mr Morriss' brother[2] we have offer'd them our services at Paris, we carry on our buisness seperately without communicating our Opperations to one another, if our house can be useful to them they may dispose of it.

Several Vessells have been consign'd to us from Rhode Island and Virginia they have been dispatched in few Days with good Cargos and we can flatter Ourselves that all Vessells consign'd to us will meet with equal dispatch as we have taken our measures in consequence.

We have obtain'd a written Permission for twenty thousand hogds of tobaco, by on recipt of this Congress may remit us what quantity they please and we will warrant their admition in our Ports.

My Presence in France is too necessary, being obliged to transact the secret affairs myself, to permit me to return to the Continent before the End of the Warr, unless you think proper I should go sooner, my residence is at Nants at the House of M. Jques Gruel Mercht it is the most advantageous Port in France for your ships, its River runs 150 Leagues into the heart of the Kingdom and facilitates the transport of all kind of Goods. consequently there are large purchases made in this City of all kinds, which induced me to fix on it as the fittest for your affairs, here you may send all your ships, I will be answerable for the disposal of their Cargos, if you send to Bordeaux Direct to Mesrs Reculé de Basmarin & Raimbaux, at Cadiz to Mesrs Delaville Brothers, with orders to advise Mr Jques Gruel at the arrival of each ship Consign'd to them, so that they may dispose of the Cargos and their produce to satisfie your demands.

Letter from Cadiz[1]

[Extract] August 3.

There have arrived here within this week past seven of our merchantmen from the Havanna: One of these vessels brought two English Sailors, being part of twenty-two British Sailors belonging to three vessels of their nation, who were taken off the island of Cuba on their homeward-bound passage from Jamaica by two American privateers, who gave the above twenty-two men leave either to go to America, or be put on shore; the latter of which they chose; and having a boat given them, arrived safe in it on the island of Cuba.[2] The twenty others are expected here in the next ships that arrive from thence.

"Humanitas" [William Lee] to the Lord Mayor of London[1]

My Lord: London, August 5, 1776.

I was last week on board the American privateer called the Yankee, commanded by Captain [Henry] Johnson, and lately brought into this port by Captain [George] Ross, who commanded one of the West-India sugar ships, taken by the privateer in July last; and, as an Englishman, I wish your Lordship, who is so happily placed at the head of this great city (justly famed for its great humanity even to its enemies,) would be pleased to go likewise, or send proper persons, to see the truly shocking, and, I may say, barbarous and miserable condition of the unfortunate American prisoners, who, however criminal they may be thought to have been, are deserving of pity, and entitled to common humanity.

They are twenty-five in number, and all inhumanly shut close down, like wild beasts, in a small stinking apartment in the hold of a sloop, about seventy tons burden, without a breath of air, in this sultry season, but what they receive through a small grating over head, the openings in which are not more than two inches square in any part, and through which the sun beats intensely hot all day; only two or three being permitted to come on deck at a time; and then they are exposed in the open sun, which is reflected from the decks and water like a burning glass.

I do not at all exaggerate, my Lord: I speak the truth; and the resemblance that this barbarity bears to the memorable black-hole, at Calcutta, as a gentleman present on Saturday observed, strikes every one at the sight. All England ought to know that the same game is now acting upon the Thames on board this privateer, that all the world cried out against at the mention of in India, some years ago, as practised on Captain Hallowell and others of the King's good subjects.

The putrid streams issuing from the hole are so hot and offensive, that one cannot, without the utmost danger, breathe over it; and I should not be at all surprised if it should cause a plague to spread. The miserable wretches below look like persons in a hot bath, panting, sweating and fainting for want of air; and the Surgeon declares that they must all soon perish in that situation, especially as they are almost all in a sickly state with bilious disorders.

The Captain and Surgeon, it is true, have the liberty of the cabin, (if it deserves the name of a cabin,) and make no complaints on their own account; they are both sensible, well-behaved young men, and can give a very good account of themselves, having no signs of fear, and being supported by a consciousness of the justice of their cause. They are men of character, of good families in New-England, and highly respected in their different occupations; but being stripped of their all by the burning of towns and other destructive measures of the present unnatural war, were forced to take the disagreeable method of making reprisals, to maintain themselves and their children, rather than starve.

Numbers of gentlemen, and friends of Government, who were on board at the same time, will confirm the truth of this my representation, being very sensibly touched themselves at the horrid sight.

English prisoners taken by the Americans have been treated with the most remarkable tenderness and generosity, as numbers who are safely returned to England most freely confess, to the honour of our brethern in the Colonies. And it is a fact, which can be well attested in London, that this very Surgeon on board the privateer, after the battle of Lexington, April 10, 1775, for many days voluntarily and generously, without fee or reward, employed himself in dressing the King's wounded soldiers, (who but an hour before would have shot him, if they could have come at him,) and in making a collection for their refreshment, of wine, linen, money, &c., in the town where he lived. This is a real fact, of which the most ample testimony may be had.[2]

The capture of the privateer was solely owing to the ill-judged lenity and brotherly kindness of Captain Johnson, who, not considering his English prisoners in the same light that he would Frenchmen or Spaniards, put them under no sort of confinement, but permitted them to walk the decks as freely as his own people, at all times. Taking advantage of this indulgence, the prisoners one day, watching their opportunity when most of the privateer's people were below and asleep, shut down the hatches, and making all fast, had immediate possession of the vessel without using any force.

I shall conclude with saying, that though this letter is addressed to your Lordship, I hope that all who may read it, and have any influence, will do all in their power to gain the necessary relief; and it is humbly apprehended that the well disposed, who are blessed with affluence, could not better bestow their bounty than upon these poor objects. Vegetables and ripe fruits of all kinds, with porter, &c., must be very useful, as well as the means to procure other necessaries. The privateer lies opposite to Ratcliffe-Cross, a mile and a half below the Tower, and by asking for Captain Johnson admittance may be obtained.

Humanitas.

We have been informed, since the receipt of the above letter, that the crew of the American privateer the Yankee, were yesterday morning, at half-past three o'clock, conveyed on board a vessel, and carried down the river, to be secured in Dover Castle.

We hear that a petition will be presented to the Secretary of State for the American Department, by the merchants, to cause the Captain of the Yankee privateer to be kept in custody to answer to them for the property he has illegally taken, he being the sole owner of the privateer, and the prizes of course will be sold in America for his account and emolument.

It is said Capt. Stephenson, Commander of the Ship Lady Juliana, which was taken by the Provincials, was coming Home with his Lady, whom he had married Abroad, and had received a considerable Fortune with her, the Whole of which was seized by the Provincials.

By a private Letter received in Town from Philadelphia, dated June 28, we find that two Ships had arrived from Holland, and four more were hourly expected, all laden with Dutch Effects; and that four Vessels under foreign Colours, cleared at the Isle of Wight, and laden with valuable Cargoes, were also expected.

Public Advertiser, TUESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1776

London [August 6].

Admiral Gayton's Order for the Merchantmen to rendezvous at Blue Fields, and to be convoyed from thence an hundred and fifty Leagues on their Passage to England, was certainly communicated to the Provincials, as the Ships which were taken were met with by the Privateers, not twenty four Hours after they were quitted by the Men of War.

There being so many of our Ships of War on the American Coast, some are in Hopes that on their receiving Advice of the Capture of the nine West Indiamen by the Provincial Privateers, and of their being carried into some of their Ports, a bold Stroke would be struck in order to retake them: Their Cargoes are so valuable, and so much of it falls as Prize Money to the Captors, our Tars it is thought will run any Lengths to accomplish it. It is true they have not as yet attempted any Thing of this Kind, but they never had an Object equal to a West India Ship loaded, worth 10,000 l. Sterling.

On Sunday the Officers and Seamen, brought Prisoners on board the Yankee Privateer (lying in Limehouse Hole) were shipped on board the Justitia Transport Ship, in order to their working on the Thames. A Correspondent wishes to know, "if these People are not sentenced without a Trial?" It is true that they have been declared Rebels; but it has not been customary to condemn Rebels, but by the Verdict of a Jury; at least it was not so in the Reign of George the Second: But our whole System of Politics seems to be reversed, and what was Law thirty Years ago, is not so now; or, perhaps, adds our Correspondent, the Distinction is made between Scotch and American Rebels; and if so, we shall cease to wonder when we consider the Operation of the over-ruling Influence.

"It is an ill wind that blows no one Good." When the above Seamen were removed, it was permitted for any Person to come on board, and many Hundreds gratified their Curiosity, to the great Emolument of a number of Waterman, who kept embarking and debarking their Customers for Hours. The Place was a perfect Fair. The above Yankie Privateer is a tight-built Vessel, admirably adapted for swift Sailing, and carries twelve Guns on one Deck. She lies very low in Water.

By another Letter from Glasgow we are informed, that the Oxford Transport from Clyde, with Part of the 42d Regiment, has been taken by the Provincials. As she was standing in for Boston a Vessel with 16 Guns bore down upon her, took out all the Officers and Arms, and put some of their own Sailors on board to navigate her. The Highlanders were no sooner out of Sight of the Privateer than they compelled their new Masters to alter their Course, and swore they would put every one of them to Death, unless they either carried them to Lord Dunmore, or to some other Place where they might meet with some Ship or Ships of War belonging to his Majesty; but unfortunately for these brave Fellows, a small Sloop with a few Swivels took them a second Time, and they now languish in Captivity at Williamsburgh. — The same Letters add, that it was confidently reported that two other Transports, with Part of Fraser's Highlanders, were taken also.[1]

We hear from Bourdeaux, that a very considerable American trade is carried on there, and has continued since the beginning of the present disputes with our Colonies. About 15 days ago, a fine Bermudian sloop sailed for Philadelphia, having 20 tone of gunpowder on board.

The Yankee Privateer, taken from the Americans, we are informed, is going to be fitted as a Tender to carry the Seamen, that enter at the Houses of Rendezvous, to the Ships of War at the different Sea Ports.

Sunday Morning at Three o'Clock twenty of the Prisoners taken in the Yankie Privateer were conveyed by Water to be lodged in Dover Castle. Among these twenty there are only three Native Americans, and those are all New England Men. It was mentioned in a former Paragraph, that the Yankie Privateer mounted twelve Guns; but the Fact is, that she is pierced for twelve, and mounts only eight, which are called Six Pounders, but are only Four. She has six Swivels, and two Cohorns, and being no bigger than a large sailing Boat, she appears to be one combined Picture of the Instruments of Death. The American Colours on board her are sent to his Majesty, in Consequence of Orders received from the Admiralty.

The Arrival of Lord Howe, and the reinforcement under Commodore Hotham, were daily expected at Staten Island. Lord Shuldham having stationed his cruizers in the properest manner to fall in with and direct them thither.

Public Advertiser, MONDAY, AUGUST 12, 1776

The West India Ships, lately taken by the Americans, will, it is said, occasion a pathetic Remonstrance, shortly to be presented at St. James's.

The Method by which the Yankey Privateer was taken was as follows: Capt. Johnson (of the Yankey) [James] Hodges, and [George] Ross[1] were sitting together in the Cabbin, when Johnson having inadvertently laid down his Cutlass, Ross and Hodges took the Advantage of it, one coming behind Capt. Johnson, seized and threw him down, while the other got Possession of the Cutlass. The Guard stationed on the Quarter-deck at the same Time laid down his Cutlass to go forward, one of Ross's or Hodges's People (who had been let into the Conspiracy) immediately seized it and gave the Alarm; on which either Ross or Hodges ran up on the Quarter-deck, and got Possession of the Arm-Chest before the Privateer's Men and those of the Merchantmen (who were at large and unconfined, though then down in the Hold) could get upon the main Deck. One of the Americans took up a Scrubbing-brush, and advancing to the Quarter-deck, he was told by the Man possessed of the Cutlass, that if he came a Step farther, his Head should be cut off. The Privateer's Men thus finding the Quarter-deck and their Arms all in Possession of their Adversaries, and their Captain a Prisoner in the Cabbin, submitted without farther Resistance, being promised good Treatment, and to be landed as soon as possible in some Part of America, and then to be at Liberty to go where they pleased. So far from this Promise being complied with, the Men were put in Irons, and closely confined in the Hold of the Privateer, and all of them brought into the River Thames; since which they were, in the Night of Saturday last, hurried into a Man of War's Tender, and smuggled to some Place of Confinement, but where is not yet certainly known.

Capt. Johnson complained of the illiberal Behaviour and cruel Usage he suffered, by being insulted frequently while at Sea, calling him by the most opprobrious Names, and threatening him with the cruellest and most Savage Punishments, and also for suffering many People to come on board after they arrived in the River, to insult him in the basest and grossest Terms, though he was then a Prisoner; and when his Brother came to see him after a three Years Absence, they would not permit them to talk together one Minute in private

Edinburgh, Aug. 14. We are desired from good Authority to contradict a Paragraph in last Night's Edinburgh Advertiser; mentioning Sir William Erskine's being taken by an American Privateer with the Money of the 71st Regiment. This is without any Foundation, as he sailed on board the Ocean, a Ship of 18 Carriage Guns, and proceeds entirely upon the Supposition of his having been on board the Venus, Capt. Wilson, which, with the Crawford Capt. M'Lean, was taken and carried into Boston: On board the first was Capt. Fraser's Company, and Captain M'Leod with his Company on board the other. Upon their Arrival off Cape Ann, they were attacked by four Privateers, whom they fought a considerable Time, and obliged them to sheer off. They then went into Nantasket Road, in Expectation of finding the Men of War; but, in place thereof, were surrounded by a great Number of armed Schooners, who, with the Assistance of the Privateers formerly beat off, carried them into Boston.[1]

A Sailor who came home with the Howe transport, which arrived on Sunday at Greenock, in 25 Days from Halifax, gives the above Account. He went out with the Mayflower, of Whitehaven, Capt. Crosbie, having on board Capt. Aeneas M'Intosh's Company of the 71st. . . . On their Way to Halifax from Boston, they were attacked by a Privateer of 10 Carriage and six Swivel Guns, whom they fought for seven Glasses, and were on the Point of being taken, when a Man of War came in Sight, and relieved them.[2]

The Mermaid, Capt. Yoward, which sailed from Clyde with 120 of Fraser's Highlanders, fell in on the 10th of June, off Cape Ann, with an American Privateer, mounting 10 Six-pounders, and 14 Swivels. An Engagement ensued, which continued four Hours and a Half, when the Privateer sheered off. It is not known how many on board the Privateer were killed, but it was imagined the Musquetry of the Soldiers (who behaved exceedingly well) did great Execution, as the Ships were within Pistol Shot for two Hours of the Engagement. Capt. Yoward, one Seaman, and three Soldiers, were wounded on board the Mermaid; they afterwards proceeded for Boston, but found that the Provincials had erected a Battery upon an Island, and had driven all the Men of War and Ships from Boston Bay. The Mermaid arrived safe at Halifax the 23d of June.[3]

1. This is a woefully garbled account. The Venus was not captured; the Crawford was taken along with the Oxford, on May 29, 1776, by the Continental brig Andrew Doria; and the engagement in Boston harbor was fought by the transports George and Annabella.
2. The man of war was H. M. Sloop Hope.
3. This attack was made by one of Washington's schooners out of Salem.

Wooldridge & Kelly to the Lords Commissioners, British Treasury[1]

To The Right Honorable The Lords Commissioners of His Majestys Treasury.

The Memorial of Messieurs Wooldridge & Kelly of the City of London Merchants.

Humbly Sheweth

That your Lordships Memorialists are the Owners of a Ship called the Molly, Daniel Lawrence Mastr who sailed from Baltimore in the Province of Maryland in the month of February last, with a very valuable Cargo of Wheat, Flour, & Staves for Falmouth & a market, but the Ship meeting with several delays in the river Patapsico was there Seized & detained by an Armed Vessell in the service of Government, that soon after that Seizure she was retaken by an Armed Ship in the Service of the Americans, & being by them liberated, She proceeded on her Voyage in the begining of the Month of March last but in getting out of the River she was again Seized by a Tender belonging to the Liverpool Man of War, who carried her to Lord Dunmore in Virginia when His Lordship appointed Commissioners to try her, which Commissioners acquitted her. And that after her acquital His Lordship thought proper to detain her for the Service of Government. Your Lordships Memorialists further beg leave to represent that the said Ship & her Cargo has cost them more than Eight Thousand pounds Sterling which sum they wuld have received some months ago had the Ship been permitted to have proceeded on her Voyage which was strictly within the Intention of the Act Passed in the last Sessions of Parliament for "Restraining the Trade &c"

They therefore most humbly Pray that your Lordships will be pleased to order immediate payment to be made to them for the said Ship & her Cargoe without [which] your Memorialists will inevitably be ruined as they and their Predecessors Messrs Kelly Lott & Co have what is to them, an Immense Sum due to them from the Colonies, besides a very considerable property in the Provinces of New York, New Jersey & Pensylvania.

Your Lordships Memorialists beg leave to annex the original Invoice, bill of Lading, Commissioners Acquital of the Ship & her Cargo, with the protest &c in order to illucidate the facts to your Lordships. And your Lordships will therefore be pleased to direct such relief to your Memorialists as to your Lordships may seem meet, and your Memorialists as in Duty bound will ever Pray, &c.

London [August 14].

Captain Groves, of the Tyne Packet, who is arrived at Falmouth from Jamaica, was obliged to work up as far as Cape Nichola Mole, to get what Information he could of the American Privateers; when he was informed that a great many American Vessels were cruizing about the Windward Passage; in particular that two large armed Vessels were cruizing near Crooked Island, viz. a Brig mounting 16 Guns and 80 Men, and a Sloop with 14 Guns and 70 Men. Captain Groves met with a Sloop off Bermuda, which he took to be an American, but out-sailed her, and afterwards met with a French Merchant Ship from Porto Prince, who had been boarded by an American Privateer of 16 Guns and 160 Men, who plundered him, and wantonly fired six Shots before he came up to him. They enquired of the Frenchman what West Indiamen he had met with, but the Captain refused to tell him.

LORDS COMMISSIONERS, ADMIRALTY, TO LORD GEORGE GERMAIN[1]

My Lord, Admiralty Office 15th August 1776.

Your Lordship having in your letter of the 9th inst. signified to Us His Majesty's Pleasure that the Ships which have been ordered to be provided to carry the Regimental Cloathing to North America, should be sufficiently manned and armed to defend themselves against any of the Rebel Cruizers in case of Separating from their Convoy, we gave the necessary Directions thereupon to the Navy Board; & They having in return, by their Letter of the 12th instant, sent us a List of the Ships taken up for the Service abovementioned, with their force, and acquainted Us that, if those Ships are not judged to be of sufficient Strength to defend themselves against the Rebel Cruizers, they have reason to believe that Others capable of mounting Guns sufficient to make a better defence, cannot be procurred in time, We send Your Lordship herewith a Copy of the said Letter for His Majesty's Information, and beg leave to observe that if it be His Majesty's Pleasure that other Ships of greater force be taken up for this Service, the Season will be so far spent that it will be impracticable for the Ship destined to Quebec,[2] and very precarious for those bound to New York and Halifax to make their Passage this Year, But that if it be His Majesty's Pleasure that the Ships which have been already provided, and have nearly (tho' it is to be lamented so late) taken in their Loading, should proceed on their Voyages, care will be taken to appoint sufficient Convoys for them, and to put trusty Sea Officers on board each of them, the better to guard against their separating from their Convoy, & to direct their Proceedings, and defend them if attacked in case of Separation. My Lords Commissioners of the Admty having on the 3d of this Month directed that the Crew of an American Armed Vessel called the Yankee which had been seized & brought into the River, should be receiv'd on board the Ardent, then at Blackstakes & kept & Victualled there til farther orders. I am now commanded by their Lordships to signify their direction to you to order the Ten Men named in the Margin[2] Part of Crew of the said Vessel, to be put on board the Vulture Sloop & then to direct her Captain to proceed with them to Spithead & dispose of them as the Commanding Officer there shall direct[3] victualling them while on board the Sloop in like manner as her complement, & taking particular care they do not make their escape; & having so done to remain at Spithead til farther Order.

It is also their Lordships farther directions that you cause the remainder of the Crew of the said Armed Vessel to be sent on board the Mars at Blackstakes, where they are to be kept & Victualled in like manner as on board the Ardent until the Beaver Sloop arrives at the Nore, when you are to cause them to be put on board her & carried to Spithead (when she proceeds thither) in like manner as those Ordered to be sent by the Vulture, except Henry Johnson the Commander & Eliza Downour [Eliphalet Downer] the Surgeon of the said Vessel, who are to be continued ordered on board the Mars 'til farther Orders.

LORD SUFFOLK TO THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS, ADMIRALTY[1]

My Lords, St James's August 16th 1776.

I am directed to signify to Your Lordships The King's Commands that Henry Johnson, El. Downour, David Hall, and John Cochran, who acted as Officers aboard the Rebel Privateer call'd the Yankee of Boston, be properly secured for the present aboard such Vessel belonging to His Majesty as your Lordships may find most convenient. But with regard to the Crew, consisting of 17. Men & 2 Negro Slaves, His Majesty in his Clemency has no Objection to their being received aboard some Ship of War. It would however be most expedient to dispose of them in some Vessel employed in the East Indies, or, if not, in the Mediterranean Station, as they will be under constant Temptation to desert in the Hopes of obtaining in North America a Share of the valuable Plunder which their Vessel had collected [and] sent to New England. [Extract] London, 16 August 1776

It is only natural as you have observed, My lord, that the work in our Ports determined the Court of London to increase the number of Guardships. But it would not be if they resorted to the impressment, and if this measure should take place the time for negotiatons would be passed and we should begin to act.

I have the honor to send you herewith, My lord, the translation of the Act of 4 July whereby the Colonies declared their independence under the title of United States of America. Others besides myself will better appreciate the motives upon which this declaration rests. The fact itself is what seems to interest us most. It is caught between two Armies and in sight of a formidable fleet that the Colonies declared war against Great Britain; because it is the Act that was meant by the declaration of war. We must admit, My lord, that this is quite far from the idea of immediate submission which the Government always entertained and which it considered as the unavoidable result of the display of its forces.

Public Advertiser, FRIDAY, AUGUST 16, 1776

Yesterday George Ross, Master of a Vessel in the Merchants Service, was brought before the Lord Mayor, in the Council Chamber, Guildhall, being charged with a Breach of the Peace against Mr. Alderman [William] Lee, upon the Royal Exchange, and threatening "to do for him in another Place."[1] His Conduct appearing to have been exceedingly outrageous, he was bound over in a Recognizance of One Thousand Pounds, and two Sureties in Five Hundred Pounds each, to appear next Sessions at the Old Bailey. It appeared on the Evidence that his Assault on Mr. Lee was entirely unprovoked on the Part of the Alderman, who had never seen him before; and there appeared sufficient Reason to suspect that a very dark Design was intended against Mr. Lee. It was proved that the Treatment of the Prisoner[s] brought into the River in the Yankee Privateer was literally as stated in a Letter addressed to the Lord Mayor, signed "Humanitas," and published in the Ledger on Monday the 5th of this Month. That Capt. [James] Hodges's Humanity and Kindness to the Prisoners was uniform and laudable. Capt. Winn, who was present the whole Time that Mr. Alderman Lee was with the American Prisoners, and heard all their Conversation, declared, before the Lord Mayor, that the Conversation stated to have passed by a Writer, under the Signature of "Plain Truth," in the Gazeteer of Wednesday last, was totally false.

LORD GEORGE GERMAIN TO THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS, ADMIRALTY[1]

My Lords, Whitehall [London] 16th August 1776.

Having had the honor to lay before The King the Copy of Vice Admiral Lord Shuldham's Letter to your Lordships of the 16th of April, transmitted to me in your Letter of the 7th of June, in which he acquaints your Lordships that upon quitting the Harbour of Boston with the Fleet, he had stationed a Squadron of His Majesty's Ships in Nantasket Road, under the command of Captain [Francis] Banks of the Renown, for the purpose as he expresses it, "of intercepting and sending to Halifax the Ships with the Supplies ordered to Boston, and which would consequently be Ignorant of the removal of the Fleet and Army;" And having also laid before His Majesty the Disposition of the Ships under Lord Shuldham's command, dated 6th July last, transmitted in Your Lordships Letter of the 14th Instant, from which it appears that His Majesty's Ships Renown and Milford, the Hope Sloop and Halifax Brigantine were then stationed in Boston Bay.

His Majesty remarked, with much Surprize, that in the account given by General Howe in his Letter to me of the 7th of July, of the Capture of two Transports with part of the Highland Regiments onboard, those Transports are said to have been carried into Boston, without having been intercepted by any of His Majesty's Ships; That other accounts from different quarters represent that Harbour as an Asylum for the Rebel Cruizers and their Prizes, And that the late Advices from Halifax mention the arrival there of the Renown and Milford, two of the Ships stated by Lord Shuldham to be cruizing in the Bay of Boston.

His Majesty was therefore pleased to command me to signify to your Lordships His Majesty's Pleasure, that you do direct Lord Howe to inquire into the Truth of these Facts, and into the conduct of the Officers commanding such of His Majesty's Ships as have been stationed in Nantasket Road, or appointed to Cruize in the Bay of Boston since the Evacuation of that Town by the Army, and to report the same to your Lordships for His Majesty's Information.

I am further commanded to signify to your Lordships His Majesty's Pleasure that Lord Howe be also directed to inquire into, and report to your Lordships, for His Majesty's Information, the Causes which so long operated to prevent the Station of a small Squadron of His Majesty's Ships in the Delaware Bay, agreeable to what was signified to Your Lordships by the Earl of Dartmouth, by His Majesty's command, in his Lordship's Letter of the 7th July 1775; And what were the Motives which induced the removal of His Majesty's Ships Roebuck and Liverpool from that River, when at length it had been thought fit to station them there, by which an Opportunity was afforded to a large number of the Rebel Ships to sail from thence without Interruption, and for bringing in Supplies of all Sorts of Ammunition and other Necessaries of which the Rebels stood so much in need. – I am &c

18 Aug. (Sunday)

BEAUMARCHAIS TO THE COMMITTEE OF SECRET CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS [1]

Gentlemen: Paris, August 18, 1776

The respectful esteem that I bear towards that brave people who so well defend their liberty under your conduct has induced me to form a plan concurring in this great work, by establishing an extensive commercial house, solely for the purpose of serving you in Europe, there to supply you with necessaries of every sort, to furnish you expeditiously and certainly with all articles – clothes, linens, powder, ammunition, muskets, cannon, or even gold for the payment of your troops, and in general every thing that can be useful for the honorable war in which you are engaged. Your deputies, gentlemen, will find in me a sure friend, an asylum in my house, money in my coffers, and every means of facilitating their operations, whether of a public or secret nature. I will, if possible, remove all obstacles that may oppose your wishes from the politics of Europe.

At this very time, and without waiting for any answer from you, I have procured for you about two hundred pieces of brass cannon, four pounders, which will be sent to you by the nearest way, two hundred thousand pounds of cannon powder, twenty thousand excellent fusils, some brass mortars, bombs, cannon balls, bayonets, platines, clothes, linens, etc., for the clothing of your troops, and lead for musket balls. An officer of the greatest merit for artillery and genius, accompanied by lieutenants, officers, artillerists, cannoniers, &c., whom we think necessary for the service, will go for Philadelphia, even before you have received my first dispatches. This gentleman is one of the greatest presents that my attachment can offer you. Your deputy, Mr. Deane, agrees with me in the treatment which he thinks suitable to his office; and I have found the power of this deputy sufficient that I should prevail with this officer to depart under the sole engagement of the deputy respecting him, the terms of which I have not the least doubt but Congress will comply with.[2] The secrecy necessary in some part of the operation which I have undertaken for your service requires also, on your part, a formal resolution that all the vessels and their demands should be constantly directed to our house alone, in order that there may be no idle chattering or time lost — two things that are the ruin of affairs. You will advise me what the vessels contain which you shall send into our ports. I shall choose so much of their loading, in return for what I have sent, as shall be suitable to me when I have not been able beforehand to inform you of the cargoes which I wish. I shall facilitate to you the loading, sale and disposal of the rest. For instance, five American vessels have just arrived in the port of Bordeaux, laden with salt fish. Though this merchandise, coming from strangers, is prohibited in our ports, yet as soon as your deputy had told me that these vessels were sent to him by you to raise money from the sale for aiding him in his purchases in Europe, I took so much care that I secretly obtained from the Farmers General an order for landing it without any notice being taken of it. I could even, if the case had so happened, have taken on my own account these cargoes of salted fish, though it is no way useful to me, and charged myself with its sale and disposal, to simplify the operation and lessen the embarrassments of the merchants and of your deputy.

I shall have a correspondent in each of our seaport towns, who, on the arrival of your vessels, shall wait on the captains, and offer every service in my power. He will receive their letters, bills of lading, and transmit the whole to me. Even things which you may wish to arrive safely in any country in Europe, after having conferred about them with your deputy, I shall cause to be kept in some secure place. Even the answers shall go with great punctuality through me, and this way will save much anxiety and many delays. I request of you, gentlemen, to send me next spring, if it is possible for you, ten or twelve thousand hogsheads, or more, if you can, of tobacco from Virginia of the best quality.

You very well understand that my commerce with you is carried on in Europe; that it is in the ports of Europe I make and take returns. However well-bottomed my house may be and however I may have appropriated many millions to your trade alone, yet it would be impossible for me to support it if all the dangers of the sea, of exports and imports, were not entirely at your risk. Whenever you choose to receive my goods in any of our windward or leeward islands you have only to inform me of it, and my correspondents shall be there according to your orders, and then you shall have no augmentation of price but of freight and insurance. But the risk of being taken by your enemies still remains with you, according to the declaration rendered incontestible by the measures I shall take by your deputy himself. This deputy should receive, as soon as possible, full power and authority to accept what I shall deliver to him, to receive my accounts, examine them, make payments thereupon, or enter into engagements which you shall be bound to ratify as the head of that brave people to whom I am devoted; in short, always to treat about your interests immediately with me.

Notwithstanding the open opposition which the King of France, his ministers, and the agents of administration show, and ought to show, to everything that carries the least appearance of violating foreign treaties and the internal ordinances of the kingdom, I dare promise to you, gentlemen, that my indefatigable zeal shall never be wanting to clear up difficulties, soften prohibitions, and, in short, facilitate all operations of a commerce which my advantage, much less than yours, has made me undertake with you. What I have just informed you of is only a general sketch, subject to all the augmentations and restrictions which events may point out to us.

One thing can never vary or diminish: it is the avowed and ardent desire I have of serving you to the utmost of my power. You will recollect my signature, that one of your friends in London, some time ago, informed you of my favorable disposition towards you and my attachment to your interests. Look upon my house, then, gentlemen, from henceforward as the chief of all useful operations to you in Europe, and my person as one of the most zealous partisans of your cause, the soul of your success, and a man most deeply impressed with respectful esteem, with which I have the honor to be,

Roderique Hortalez & Co.

P.S. — I add here, to conclude, that every American vessel, though not immediately armed or loaded by you, will be entitled to my good offices in this country; but yours, particularly addressed to my house, will receive a particular preference from me. I ought also to intimate to you, gentlemen, that from the nature of my connection it is to be wished you would use discretion even in the accounts that you give to the general Congress. Everything that passes in your great assemblies is known, I cannot tell how, at the court of Great Britain. Some indiscreet or perfidious citizen sends an exact account of your proceedings to the palace of St. James. In times of great exigency Rome had a dictator; and in a state of danger, the more the executive power is brought to a point, the more certain will be its effect, and there will be less to fear from indiscretion. It is to your wisdom, gentlemen, that I make this remark; if it seems to you just and well planned, look upon it as a new mark of my ardor for your rising Republic.

SILAS DEANE TO THE COMMITTEE OF SECRET CORRESPONDENCE[1]

[Extract] [Paris, August 18, 1776]

. . . If a few of our cruisers should venture on this coast they might do very well, as they would find protection in the harbors of this kingdom. Coming ostensibly for the purpose only of commerce or otherwise no questions would be asked, and they might wait until an opportunity offered (of which they might be minutely informed), and then strike something to the purpose. I give this hint to individuals rather than to the honorable Congress as a body. The bearer, Mr. [William] McCreary, has obliged me by copying my memoir, which I sent herewith. It has had a great run among the ministers of this and some other courts in a private way. M. Beaumarchais writes by this opportunity; he has shown me his letter, and I have agreed in general to the contents, not understanding any exclusive privilege for his house. Everything he says, writes, or does is in reality the action of the ministry; for that a man should but a few months since confine himself from his creditors, and now, on this occasion, be able to advance half a million, is so extraordinary, that it ceases to be a mystery. . . .

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE CHIEF MATE OF A WEST INDIAMAN, TO HIS FATHER IN NEWCASTLE, DATED LONDON, AUGUST 19."[1]

I had the misfortune to be taken by the Yankee privateer, when bound to the head quarters, loaded with rum for the fleet and the army, from Antigua to New York. In lat. 36.40. long. 74.50. west, the said privateer, in the grey of the morning, gave chace, and got along side us about nine o'clock.

We had but 2 four pounders and 12 shot, and gave 11 of them; the other gun lost the fore-truck, or wheel, and we could not get it to bear; and he being close along side, his guns loaded with round crop bar and canester shot, that we were obliged to strike and hoist the boat out, and go on board with the Captain and papers; the people were all detained, as also the Captain; and their people sent on board our ship, and some more of ours were sent in the second boat, I being one of the number.

They had taken one three-decker before they took us, she was from Jamaica, with sugar and rum, for London; and three days after parted with the two ships, they having orders to make the best of their way for Boston, Marble-head, or Cape Ann. We soon ran them out of sight with the privateer. We having been eight days on board as prisoners, concerted measures to rise, and take her from them, which we accomplished, without lives lost on either side. We went in search of our own ships, but fell in with two American privateers, which made us bear up, and make all the sail we could to get from them; for if they had taken us, we should have expected nothing but death, but we were determined to fight to the last man, and would have sunk her rather than been taken.

We had a fair wind all the way to London, and fetched all the prisoners here with us, which were 25; and of us 14, officers included. After we were masters for 20 days and nights we durst not go off the deck for fear of a revolt from them. We did not put any in irons, but one, and that was for his impertinence. She is a fine sloop, mounts 9 four-pounders, 16 swivels, and two cohorns.[2]

SILAS DEANE TO BEAUMARCHAIS[1]

Sir, Paris, August 19th, 1776.

Since the stores and goods have been engaged and getting ready, I have made inquiry of several merchants respecting the charter of vessels for America generally, without mentioning what their cargoes should consist of, and have written in the same way to some of my correspondents, and in the whole, I find I shall not be able to provide them as early as is necessary at any rate, and I fear not without making their destination and object too public. You will recollect that I mentioned my apprehensions of this subject some days since, and now propose (if consistent with your other engagements,) that you would take the procuring of the vessels necessary on you, at least, as far as to be security for the payment of their charter. It gives me pain to put this additional trouble and expence on you, but I know that you think nothing within your power is too great to be undertaken for the service of the United Colonies of America, whose grateful acknowledgments must equal, though they can never exceed your generous exertions in their favor at this critical and important period of their affairs. These vessels will return with cargoes on your account, which, with what will probably arrive from other remittances, will enable you to proceed to the greatest extent in executing the great and liberal plan you have proposed. I shall do myself the honor of waiting on you to-morrow morning on this and other affairs; mean time I am, with the utmost respect and attachment, Sir [&c.]

Silas Deane.

MARQUIS DE GRIMALDI TO PRINCE MASSERANO[1]

Your Excellency: After warning me that he did so of his own accord and without orders from his Court, the English Ambassador spoke to me about the frequency with which ships of his Colonies come to our Ports and carry on their usual trade. He indicated how convenient it would be to issue orders forbidding this assistance, as the Portuguese Ministry has now done with respect to that Kingdom. I replied to him saying that I believed that very few came; that they were regarded here as subjects of Great Britain, because it was not possible to tell which were of one party and which of another; that they came in pursuit of a legal, long-established trade; that it did not seem usual to hinder it, above all when they did not carry or seek in exchange goods that England objected to. I recalled to him that the British Cabinet had rejected a proposal Your Excellency made to them last year to turn away from Port Egmond again certain American vessels which, it was supposed, had come there without the sovereign's knowledge. The rejection was based on the position that it would insult the English flag, a thing that would serve the Nation very badly. Lastly, not being able to persuade me that the ships might present themselves under an unknown flag, nor having any evidence of it, he said he would make the appropriate reports. I advise Your Excellency for your information and God grant Your Excellency [&c.]

The Americans are believed at last to have made a lucky Hit. A Vessel from Cadiz, laden with Dollars on Merchants Account, to the Value of 150,000 l. is missing, supposed to have been taken by two Provincial Privateers, which had been obliged to quit the Tagus, on the late Edict of his Portuguese Majesty. Thirty per Cent was Yesterday offered upon the said Vessel, to the Insurers, and refused.

He went out with the Mayflower, of Whitehaven, Capt. Crosbie, having on board Capt. Aenaes M'Intosh's company of the 71st. An old man and his two sons came out in a fishing-boat, and informed them of the evacuation of Boston, and the capture of the said two vessels.[1] On their way to Halifax from Boston they were attacked by a privateer of ten carriage and six swivel guns, whom they fought for seven glasses, and were on the point of being taken, when a man of war came in sight, and relieved them.

PIERRE PENET TO DR. BARBEU DUBOURG[1]

Intercepted. Nantes 20 August 1776.

In answer to the favour of your last letter and to the information which you desire to have about the trade which could be engaged in with the Colonies of the North; the point is that the houses which are desirous to interest themselves in this business shall be capable of making advances, or shall have sufficient credit to supply the goods to me at terms of 6 and 8 months. I should then find means to make some shipments which might amount to a million and more per annum.

According to the plan which I have formed, we should have no risk to run. The goods will be insured and, from the manner in which I shall give the orders for their sale, I am sure that it will give us, all expenses paid, a considerable profit.

An experiment may be made in the first place with a sum of 200 or 300 thousand livres. It is a good business and one which should be followed up if it be desired to carry it through, and which no one else will be able to undertake.

If that suits you, and if I am assured of the arrangements and conditions, I shall let you know the articles which it will be necessary to supply to me either at Nantes or at Bordeaux. I feel flattered that you have anticipated my ideas: for I ought to arrange this speculation with some Dutch houses. I shall however await your reply.

As regards the private provisions which I have to make on the Continent you know that that is a matter between ourselves. I have houses all over Europe where I have credit sufficient to meet the demands which I make and for this purpose I have no need, although it is a matter of many millions, of any funds or advances. I have the honour &c.

[P.S.] According to the news which I have just received from London, I am notified that the King of England has lately proposed peace to the Americans.

I learn at the same time by a captain arriving from Cadiz who has spoken with a captain from New England that Lord Dunmore has been taken prisoner by General [Charles] Lee with 3,000 of his troops.[2]

From another quarter I learn that the General Congress has issued a declaration in all the Provinces of the Thirteen United Colonies of Liberty and Independence. God grant that this news be true!

I shall have the honour to send you some furs. I am informed that there are some arrived at Bordeaux, where there are nine or ten insurgent ships.

Lord George Townshend to Lord George Germain[1]

My Lord Lord [Jeffrey] Amherst having already given you his opinion whilst I was in the Country, upon the subject of your Lordship's letter of the 7th of this month, respecting Convoy & Arming the Ordnance Vessels, I have nothing to add but my perfect concurrence; that according to the experience I have had in the service, that the best method of transporting the most essential & interesting Stores to the Army & Navy upon the American Station, is by conveying them in 40 Gun-Ships. — The upper tier of which I apprehend to be superior to any Rebel Privateer, & at the same time great Stowage & room for many Recruits, for the Swivels & small Arms might be afforded. — Probably 2 or 4 forty Gun Ships might convey all the Stores of the most interesting nature to their Destination with the utmost security. The annual Recruits of Artillery & the Officers destined for this service might be so timed, as to strengthen the Crews & lessen the number of Sailors.

Our Spades, Pickaxes, Felling-axes, Gun Carriages and many Stores known by the name of petty Emptions might be hazarded in Ships of inferior Force. But my Lord I speak this with great deference to another Department, which is the best Judge how far such Ships can, in the circumstances of Affairs be applied to this service; certainly very important in its nature, and which unless the Ordnance is possitively directed to act upon a more enlarged Plan than they seem hitherto to have understood themselves as charged with, they will find great difficulty to execute.

On the other hand my Lord, if it shall not be judged expedient that these Ordnance Stores should be conveyed by Men of War, I hope His Majesty's Orders will be signified to me by your Lordship "that the Ordnance Ships carrying Ordnance and Stores be sufficiently armed & manned against the Rebel Cruizers" will be extended so as to enable the Ordnance to hire or build Ships of greater force, than seems at present to be understood to be within this Department.

As the Ordnance cannot know what is the American's Naval Force; whether skulking Privateers or Vessels cruizing in company, the only security seems to be in stout Vessels, fitted for close Quarters, and with a proper number of Guns & Men, for which I hope your Lordship's instructions.

It will be necessary in this case, to take our Guns from the Naval Stores, to be replaced for the Navy as soon as possible.

I beg leave to trouble your Lordship with an Extract of His Majesty's Instructions for the Ordnance, by which you will judge of the distinction between the Land & Sea Service in that Department — and I also trouble your Lordship with the Orders I have given in consequence of the Directions I received this day — untill His Majesty's pleasure be further Known. I am My Lord [&c.]

CAPTAIN ROGER WILLS, R.N., TO PHILIP STEPHENS[1]

Sir Spithead 21st August 1776

Please to acquaint my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty that this day I arrived with his Majesties Sloop the Ranger under my Command at Spithead, in pursuance of Commodor Sir Peter Parker's Order, from South Carolina, in a leaky condition; having on board Captain [Charles] Hope charged with dispatches from the Commodore, and Generl Clintons Secretary charged with his dispatches. — I sail'd from the Bar of Charles Town the 15th of July, and in my track on the 20th in the Lattd of 35° 18′ N. Longd from the Bar 8° 46′ Et I fell in with a Trading Sloop belonging to the Rebels, from Ocrecock in North Carolina, bound to Cape Nicholas Mole, laden with Tobacco, and Lumber, to purchase in returne arms, Powder, or Saltpetre. I seiz'd her, exchanged the Prisoners and Order'd the prize to proceed to the first port in England. The Master informs me that it was reported in North Carolina, that Arm'd Vessels were Intended to be sent to cruze, to intercept the Homeward bound Trade, off the Western Islands. — On the 27th it blowing very fresh with thick rainy weather and a great Sea; at 6 o'Clock in the Morning in the Lattd of 39° 20′ N Longd. from Carolina 19° Et saw a Sail to the westward standing after us, Coming up very fast, on which I immediately Clear'd for Action, at ½ past 7 she Came near us, on which I hoisted the Colours and fir'd a shot at her, she hoisted a Rebel flag at her topmast head (being a Sloop of 12 Carriage guns) and return'd a shot, we exchanged several shot; as the Sea run very heigh our Carriage guns was mostly under water, and rendered almost useless. I keepd to the leeward of her that I might be able if possable to make use of the weather guns, which I did between whiles. She made frequent attempts to get to leeward of us, which I as often prevented at ½ past 8 she hauld the wind and made sail from us. I chaced her, but she being very clean, out saild us considerably. I therefore thought it most prudent to proceed on my proper course, having the above dispatches on board. I am Sir [&c.]

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PORTSMOUTH, AUG. 21."[1]

This Morning arrived at Spithead his Majesty's Sloop Ranger, Captain Willis, from Charles-Town, with Dispatches from Sir Peter Parker, which were intrusted to the Care of the Hon. Captain [Charles] Hope, who immediately set out Express for the Secretary's Office. 'Tis reported here that the Bristol Man of War, with some other of our Fleet, met with great Damage in passing a Fort in Charles-Town River, and that red-hot Shot were fired into the Ships. The Bristol was on fire twice in one Day: that Captain [John] Morris, who commanded her, was killed, and that about 200 Men were killed and wounded. His Majesty's Ship Acteon is entirely lost on a Shoal; three of our Ships ran on Shore, which occasioned great Slaughter on board them. They were about to sail from Charles-Town when this Account came away.

LORD STORMONT TO LORD WEYMOUTH[1]

Very Secret Paris August 21. 1776.

The very material Intelligence communicated to me by the Kings Command in Your Lordship's most confidential Letter of the 18th Inst agrees, as You will have observed, in several Respects with the imperfect accounts I have from time to time transmitted, particularly in my Letter No 53. in which I mentioned by Name Messrs chaumont & DuBourg. I am persuaded that the Person whom I there called Pennet is the Monsieur Pinette your Lordship mentions, He was called to me by the Name I gave him in my Letter and represented as a German Merchant, but my Information came from People of a lower Class with whom such Inacuracies are very frequent. I am likewise persuaded that Mr Deane is the Person that was mentioned to me by the name of Dana and think it very likely that He came in Company with Nathan Rumsey. . . . and may intend to return to America together in that Vessel now waiting at Bordeaux of which I gave Your Lordship a Description, and which perhaps may deserve to be watched: as it would I think be of some Importance to seize Mr Deane.

There is one Part of the Intelligence Your Lordship has received which I own, I am at a Loss to comprehend. That Beaumarchais should be recommended as an active hustling Man, and ready for this or any similar Business I can easily conceive, but I do not understand how He who has neither Money nor Credit could offer to credit the Americans, to the amount of three Millions of Livres unless this Court have secretly engaged some Merchants or adventurers here to risk that Sum.

PRÉCIS PREPARED FOR GEORGE III OF EVENTS LEADING TO THE EXPEDITION AGAINST THE SOUTHERN COLONIES[1]

[London, August 21 to August 22]

On the 21st of August 1776, Lord George Germain received another Dispatch from Genl Clinton, dated July 8th in which he says that it appeared by Letters, which he had recd from Genl. Howe that he was not expected or called upon for any immediate assistance on the opening of the Campaign. That he [had] not named either the time or place of joining him, but rather seemed, on the contrary, to intimate his wishes that some operations might take place to the Southward, & had pointed out Charlestown as an object of importance. That upon these grounds, & upon receiving Intelligence, that the Works erected by the Rebels on Sullivan's Island, were in an imperfect & unfinished state, he was induced to acquiesce in a proposal made by the Commodore to attempt the Reduction of that Fortress by a Coup de Main — That he thought it possible, at the same time that it might be followed by consequences of immediate advantage to His Majesty's Service, not intending at that season of the year, to have proceeded further than Sullivan's Island — That with this view they sailed from Cape Fear on the 31st May, and were joined on their passage by the Ranger Sloop of War, by which he recd Lord Geo. Germain's Dispatch of the 3d March which has been already stated; and thinking upon a consideration of that Dispatch, that the object in view came within the description of those pointed out therein, he resolved to proceed — That the passage from Cape Fear was attended with great difficulty, & delays That upon a consideration of the whole & Lord Cornwallis agreeing with him in opinion, he resolved as the best means of co-operating with the Fleet, to take possession of Long Island, which was represented to communicate with Sullivan's Island, by a Ford passable at low-water, & with the Main by Creeks navigable for boats of draught. That this object was effected, and the whole Force assembled on Long Island on the 18th June, except a few Recruits, who were left on board the Transports for deception — That his first business after landing was to examine the Ford, which, to his unspeakable mortification, he found to be 7 feet at low water, instead of 18 inches as had been reported, so that his Operations upon Long Island, were limited & confined — for altho' his situation was an object of jealousy both to Sullivan's Island & to the Main, yet as he had not boats for more than 6 or 700 Men, he was reduced to one attack without being able to favour that by any diversion on the other — That he acquainted the Commodore with this discovery, & with his apprehension that he should not be able with his Troops to take that share in the attack upon the Fort, he was once in hopes to have done; assuring him however than whenever he should think to begin his attack, he would make every possible diversion in his favor, or send him 2 Battalions to act on his side, in case he & the Genl Officers appointed to command them, should be of opinion they could be protected in their landing & employed to advantage – That in answer to this, it seemed to be understood that he should give the best support he could, & they only waited for a Wind to begin the attack – That at that time the Rebels had an Intrenchment & Battery on the point of Sullivan's Island, where he intended to have landed, from which he thought they might be dislodged by the light Ordnance he had on shore; but unfavourable Winds having prevented the Fleet from making the attack for 4 days, the Rebels removed from their station & took up some very strong ground 500 yds back, with a more extended Front – That this Post having very great advantage in point of situation & being defended by 4 or 5000 Men, he thought it could not be attempted without a manifest sacrifice of his Troops and accordingly had it in contemplation to make an attempt on Hederal's Point upon the Main, by making a landing within 3 miles of it – That he made a request to the Commodore, that some Frigates might be directed to co-operate with him in that attempt, to which he assented; but as his movements depended in great measure upon those of the Fleet, it was impossible to decide positively upon any plan – That about 7 o'clock on the 28th June the Fleet was discovered going upon the attack of the Fort on Sullivan's Island; but as when they brought up they did not appear to be within such a distance as to avail themselves of their fire from their tops, grapeshot, or musketry, he was apprehensive no impression would be made upon the Battery, & he likewise saw, that the 3 Frigates supposed to have been destined to cut off the Rebel communication with Hederal's Point & favour his attack upon it, were aground, immediately after the 4 leading Ships had taken their stations. That during the Attack he made every diversion by cannonade while the sands were uncovered – That small armed Vessels were ordered to proceed towards the Point of Sullivan's Island, but that they all got aground – That the Troops were disposed of in such a manner as to be a portée to attempt the landing, either on Sullivan's Island or the Main as circumstances, during the attack, should make necessary. That the Cannonade of the Fleet continued without any favourable appearances 'till night – That upon an expectation that it would be renewed in the morning he made the best dispositions he could, of the small Ordnance he could collect, to enable him if necessary whilst the tide suited to have made one effort on Sullivan's Island, an Attempt however contrary to every Military Principle, & justifiable only in a case of the success of the Fleet or of its distress, to support the one or relieve the other – That at day break finding, to his great concern, that the Fleet had retired & that there was no intention of renewing the Attack, he proposed to the Commodore to proceed as soon as possible, to the Northward and that they should sail in a few days for New York.

On the 22d of August the Lords of the Admiralty communicated to Lord Geo: Germain, a copy of a Dispatch from Sir Peter Parker to Mr. Stephens dated Bristol – in 5 fathom hole within Charles Town Bar, the 9th July 1776, in which he says, that the Sphynx & Pensacola Packet, having on the 26th May returned from reconnoitering Charles Town, the Engineers Report of the state of the Fortifications and the Works carrying on, added to an Account Genl Clinton had recd that the Troops would not be wanted so soon as he expected, having made an attempt on that place advisable, the Fleet on the 30th May, got over the Bar at Cape Fear, & on the 1st of June anchored off Bull's Bay – That on the 2d of June the Ranger & Delegate went to sound the North end of Sullivan's Island & Long Island, as far as the Rattle Snake, & next day from the northward of the Rattlesnake to the northward of Long Island – That on the 4th of June the whole Fleet except the Ranger, anchored off Charles Town Bar – That on the 5th the Delegate, covered by the Friendship, sounded the Bar, & laid down buoys preparatory to the intended entrance of the harbour on the next day by the Frigates – That on the 6th Capt Willis was directed to place the Ranger, St Lawrence and Friendship, where Genl Clinton thought proper – That on the 7th the Bristol's assistance being judged necessary, & it being the opinion of the Captains, Masters & Pilots, that if she were brought to 17 Feet 6 Inches, she might be got over the Bar, orders were immediately given for her guns to be taken out, and the ship lightened for that purpose; & the same day all the Frigates, & most of the Transports got over into 5 fathom hole – That on the 10th the Bristol got over the Bar with some difficulty – That on the 15th the Captains were given the Arrangements for the Attack of the Batteries on Sullivan's Island, & the General was informed the next day by letter, that the Ships were ready – That on the 21st signal was made to unmoor, to cause a diversion, tho' the Wind was contrary, it being imagined that the Troops were engaging the Rebels at the northend of Sullivan's Island – That this Day the General fixed on Sunday the 23d for the joint attack – That on the 23d June, a private signal was made to the General, that the Ships would go on the attack at one o'clock, but the Wind coming contrary the signal was hauled down at 11 o'Clock. That on the 25th the Experiment arrived & came over the Bar the next day, when a new arrangement was made for the attack. That on the 27th the Wind being flattering the private signal was made to the General & the Ships got under weigh but were obliged to Anchor, the Wind flying suddenly round to the northward. That on the 28th of June at half past 9. Genl Clinton was informed by signal, that the ships would go on the attack. At half an hour after 10 the signal was made for weighing, and about a quarter after Eleven they brought up against the Fort. That Coll James in the Thunder Bomb, covered by the Friendship threw several shells a little before and during the Engagement in a very good direction – That the Sphynx, Actaeon & Syren, which were to have gone to the Westward, to prevent the Fireships, or other Vessels from annoying the ships engaged, & to cut off the Retreat of the Rebels when driven from their Works ran aground thro' the ignorance of the Pilots, from whence the Sphynx & Syren got off in a few hours, but the Act[a]eon remained fast 'till the next morning when she was set on fire by her own crew to prevent her falling into the Enemies hands – That during the time of their being abreast of the Fort, which was 10 hours, a brisk fire was kept up by the Ships, with intervals, & they had the satisfaction, after being engaged 2 hours, to oblige the Rebels to slacken their fire very much, & to drive large parties of them several times out of the Fort, which were replaced by others from the Main. That the Forts were totally silenced & evacuated near an hour & half but the Rebels finding that our Army could not take possession, about 6 o'clock a considerable Body of theirs re-entered the Fort, and renewed the firing from 2 or 3 guns, the rest being as supposed dismounted – That about 9 o'clock, it being very dark, great part of their Ammunition expended, the people fatigued, the tide of Ebb almost done no prospect from the Eastward, and no possibility of their being of any further service, the ships were ordered to withdraw to their former moorings – That their Lordships will see plainly by this Account that if the Troops could have co-operated on this Attack, His Majesty would have been in possession of Sullivan's Island – But he begs leave here to be clearly understood lest it should be imagined that he means to throw even the most distant reflexion on the Army – for that he should not discharge his conscience were he not to acknowledge, that such was his opinion of The King's Troops, from the General to the private Soldier that after he had been engaged some hours & perceived that The King's Troops had not got a footing on the North end of Sullivan's Island, he was perfectly satisfied, that the landing was impracticable, & that the attempt would have been the destruction of many brave men, without the least probability of success – And that this he is certain will appear to be the case when Genl Clinton represents his situation – He then, after giving an Acct of the State of The Ships, of the number of Men killed & wounded, & of the behaviour of the Officers & Men upon the occasion, concludes with acquainting, that all the Regiments will be reembarked in a few days – That the first Brigade will sail in a day or two under convoy for New York & that the Bristol & Experiment, will, he hopes, soon follow with the remainder.

WILLIAM KNOX, UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE, TO LORD DARTMOUTH [1]

My dear Lord [London] 22 Augt 1776

I hoped to have been able to send your Lordship a more pleasing account of our Southern Expedition than is contained in the inclosed precis It is well however the Troops have not suffered by the climate which I dreaded more than the fire of the Rebels, tho' that has done no small execution on board the Ships. Not a Man on the Quarter Deck of Sir Parker's Ship at the beginning of the attack, that was not either killed or wounded before the end of it. The worst consequence of this failure will be the shewing the Rebels where their strength lies and how they may foil us again in the winter tho' our strength be greater. They were seen to hang up a man upon a Tree behind the Fort, before they could prevail on a Party to return to the Guns. We have no Account or even guess at their loss. All our hopes are now fixed on General Howe, a cheque at New York would undoe us all, God Grant he may wait for his reinforcement before he attempts any thing, and then I think they will not wait for him. I am ever Your Lordships [&c.]

ROBERT EARL TO THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS, BRITISH CUSTOMS [1]

Honble Sirs

Yesterday arrived at Spithead His Majestys Sloop Ranger Captn Wills from South Carolina with an Express; and in the Afternoon on the proper officers examining the Baggage of a Gentleman who came Passenger they found Eighty Letters, which in Obedience to your Order of the 24th February, we forwarded (in a Box) by the Coach last Night under the Seals of office Addressed to your Honors

This Ship left South Carolina the 15th Ulto and brings an Account that His Majestys Ships, Bristol, Experiment, Actaeon, Siren, Solebay, Active and Sphinx under the Command of Sir Peter Parker, attempted on the 28th June last, to get over the Bar of Charles Town River with intent to land the Troops on Sullivans Island In this Attempt, some of the Ships particularly the Bristol and Actaeon grounded on the Bar by which they became exposed for a considerable time to the continual fire of a Fort erected by the Rebels to annoy any Shipping making such Attempt; whereby the Bristol was much shattered, and the Actaeon so Circumstanced, that Sir Peter ordered her to be set on Fire which was done, and She soon afterwards blew up –

Captain [John] Morris of the Bristol lost his Arm & died soon Afterward – Captain [Alexander] Scott of the Experiment likewise lost an Arm, but is in a fair way to recover Lieutenant Pike of the Active was killed – The Bristol had two Masts Shot away. The following is the best Account we can collect of the Numbers Killed and Wounded Vizt

MEMOIR OF SILAS DEANE TO THE FRENCH MINISTRY[1]

Memoire

In the Instructions given Mr Deane by the honorable Committee of Secrecy for the Congress of the United Colonies in North America he is among other Things charged to sollicit for a Credit for "Cloathing & Arms for Twenty five Thousand Men, with a suitable Quantity of Ammunition, and One hundred Field pieces" which Article closes, with saying ["]that the whole if granted or obtained, would make a Cargo that it might be well to secure by a Convoy of Two or Three Shipps of Warr."

These Articles are now engaged but, Great Brittain depending more on preventing supplies to the Colonies of the means of Defence, than on their formidable Armaments, have taken, and will pursue every measure, both of Negotiation, & Warr to deprive the United Colonies of necessary supplies of Cloathing, & Stores for Warr.

The safe Arrival of these stores, is of the last importance, & in some sense the Fate of the United Colonies depends upon it.

The Time for their Arrival, will be in November, or December, when the Campaign on the part of the Army of Great Brittain, unaccustomed to the Severities of that Climate, must be closed; And it is easy to forsee that it must be in one of the following Situations. if Victorious, and successful in every Attempt, they will be in possession of New York, Albany, and thence of the Water courses into Canada, of Long Island and some part of the Jersies, the late opening of the Campaign will not admit of more considering the Nature of the Country, should they meet with no defeats, & the season will call their Attention to such Winter Quarters, where they may be most secure from the Forces of the United Colonies, & best receive reinforcements from Europe.

On the other hand if the Army of the United Colonies are victorious that of Great Brittain must remain shut up in Staten Island under worse Circumstances than they were last Year in Boston, or return to Hallifax, or what in such Case is much the most probable winter in the West Indies.

In either case the Arrival of this Supply at this Time will be of the utmost importance to the Army of the United Colonies.

If unfortunate their Spirits will be newfired, and defying the inclemency of the Season to which they are habituated, they will rally and their Enemy having no Advantage of fortified Towns to shelter them they will with ease regain all they lost in the Summer, & pursuing the Blow wholly drive the British Forces from the Continent.

If fortunate, & the British Forces situated in one of the above places one of which on such an Event must be their Situation this supply will enable them to drive them off finally & prevent their Return. several other Considerations need not be particularized, they are seen at once by a supposition of those Stores being intercepted to prevent which the most prudent & effectual Measur[es] must be taken.

The Stores if Shipped in French Bottoms will be safe on the open Sea, at least they ought to be so, & the Vessels have a right of entering the Ports of North America to refit or repair, under cover of which they might be landed, many other ways may be taken to effect the same purpose without Violation of the Laws of Commerce, But, inter Arma silent Leges, & We have no hopes in this Case to be an exception to this general Rule, But after every other precaution, must be prepared to oppose Force to Force; in the doing which, the United Colonies would by no means pursue, or wish to have such Measures pursued, as might involve France in a Warr, solely on their Account.

But as the United Colonies, have declared themselves Free, and independant States, and have declared open Warr with Great Brittain, if this Commerce with the United Colonies, considered in Connection, with other important Objects, should be deem'd deserving Support, & protection, France has the same Right to support & protect it, as a Commerce with the United Colonies of holland, if at Warr with Great Brittain, and for Great Brittain to forbid such a Commerce at the risque of a Warr, is in one Word to Assume the right of prescribing Laws to France, which watever he[r] inclination prompts on this head her present Resources, & desperate Situation will never imbolden her to Attempt.

In considering this Subject, several Methods have been thought of, some of which may possibly meet with Approbation, & prove effectual, or some one different may be formed from these hints

1st It is humbly submitted, whether, at this Critical period it will not be judged the true policy of France, to have a Fleet of Observation, in the American seas, and should such a Fleet be sent out, whither these Stores might not be sent under its Convoy untill they arrived in those seas, & on that Coast.

2d Should this measure not be adopted, or should such Fleet Sail too late for this purpose whither permission might not be obtained for purchasing or hiring Three, or Four Frigates as a Convoy, to Sail as for the West Indies under French Colors, but if on entering any harbor in America they should be under the Necessity of Contending, it may be done under the Colors of the United Colonies.

3d Should this be thought unadviseable, Whither it would be permitted to hire Frigates of individuals for this purpose, observing strictly such Regulations as shall be prescribed for avoiding every Thing that might justify a rupture between the Two Nations.

The Loss of these Stores by Capture would be every way of bad Consequence though it would add but little, comparatively to the Strength of the Enemy, yet the Loss to the United Colonies must be doubly great heightned by so discouraging an Accident, at so critical a period of their Affairs.

These Thoughts are humbly Submitted only by adding, that many American Seamen may now be engaged in the Ports of Great Brittain, & Ireland, who are detained there from going direct for America, but would be permitted to ship themselves for Holland, or France, and who must otherways from Necessity, be soon reduced to enter the British Service.

Paris August 22d 1776 —

1. Stevens, ed., Facsimiles, No. 580. Appended to the Memoir is a note in French summarizing its contents, which in translation reads:

> 1776 August 22. Note of contents of the memoire. In the instructions given by the American Congress to Mr Deane, he is, amongst other things, charged to solicit, upon credit, accoutrements and arms for 25,000 men with suitable amount of ammunition and 100 field guns. And when France shall have granted the whole, a cargo would be formed which might come under convoy of two or three men of war. The carrying out of this instruction is contingent upon the several events which may happen during the war which Congress will have to maintain against England.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London, 23 August 1776

. . . The Warship Pembroke and the Frigate Bologna, both old vessels destined to serve as hookers in Halifax, are ready to sail from the road of Portsmouth. They are loaded with masts and all kinds of rigging for the Fleet in America and they are also to convoy a few Transports for the service of the Army. They are presently loading two large merchantmen in Deptford which are also supposed to carry rigging to Halifax.

I had the honor to inform you previously that General Clinton was to have received at Cape Fear orders to rejoin General Howe without attempting anything against the Southern Provinces, and you will have read, My lord, that General Howe's last letters indicated he was awaiting as a matter of fact the arrival of the Army Corps under the command of General Clinton. The original orders to this last General authorized him to attempt an expedition either in Virginia or in the Carolina if he could see any interesting advantage to it, otherwise to join with the main part of the army. As soon as it was learned here that Sir Parker's Squadron with the troops destined to operate under Mr. Clinton's command had been scattered, it was thought that the moment to make an attack against the South had slipped by, and positive orders to join with General Howe were sent to him. Unfortunately those orders did not reach him, and this small Army Corps composed of about four thousand men made an attempt against Charles Town, the Capital of South Carolina. Sir Parker's Squadron, after passing the bar which is at the opening of the river, attacked batteries located on the Island of Sullivan. It was necessary to destroy them in order to make possible the disembarkement of the troops; but, unable to approach the batteries close enough to reduce them to silence because of the lack of depth of the water, he was subjected to such a running fire that after an obstinate engagement which lasted a few hours, he was forced to give up. This did not take place without losses on his side. His flagship the Bristol of 50 guns was badly damaged. The Captain on board was killed. There were besides 40 men killed and 71 wounded. The Experiment, also of 50 guns, suffered a great deal. There were 24 men killed and 72 wounded, among these the Captain who lost his arm and, from what is said, cannot get over it. The Frigates Active and Solebay had two men killed and three wounded. The Frigates Syrene and Sphynx ran aground and were set afloat again with the greatest difficulties. It was not the same for the Acteon a new Frigate of 28 guns and built with especially hardened wood through a preparation which I once procured for M. de Boynes. They had to blow her up for fear that she fell into the hands of the enemy, and you can, My lord, scratch her out of the table.[2] The Captain of this Frigate came as a passenger on the Corvette Ranger which arrived with this news in Portsmouth on the 21st. The peculiar thing about all this is that the batteries that worked so well were composed of 40 guns from the Foudroyant, the beautiful ship which we lost so unfortunately during the last war. Since they use only iron guns on their Ships, they had sent these guns which were made of cast-iron to South Carolina. I have this information from Colonel Keene, one of the Lords at the Colonial Office. The whole affair must have taken place on the 26th or the 27th of June. Its lack of success determined Sir [Peter] Parker to join with Lord Howe. But the poor condition of his Ships does not promise much speed in his navigation. The Vessel that brought this news had sailed on the 6th of July. I shall not fail to send you, My lord, whatever particulars the Government will deem proper to publish about it. Lord Sandwich tried to justify Sir [Peter] Parker, but the other Ministers blame the conduct of this Admiral claiming on the one hand that even the success of the expedition was unnecessary, and on the other hand, that at least he should have been better acquainted with the depth of the river before proceeding.[3]

Public Advertiser, FRIDAY, AUGUST 23, 1776

London, August 23.

The Americans have such a Number of Privateers at Sea, that scarce a Ship has arrived from the West India Islands but has been chaced by them.

The Fame, Moore, from Barbadoes, is safe arrived at Dublin, after being chaced on his Voyage by two American Privateers, both which she out-sailed.

The Neptune, from Antigua, for Corke, with the St. Peter, from St. Vincent's for Liverpool, and the Friendship, from Grenada to London, were all taken by an American Privateer in Lat. 31.[1]

The Albion, Hogg, from Dominica, who is arrived at Cork, was three days after she sailed chaced by an American privateer five hours, but one of his Majesty's frigates appearing in sight, obliged the privateer to give over the chace and sheer off. The frigate afterwards gave chace to the privateer, but whether she came up with her or not is unknown, as the Albion proceeded on her voyage.

There are now missing of the fleet which came under convoy of the Antelope man of war, four ships from Jamaica, and one from Barbadoes; and it is generally supposed they are taken by some American privateers.

1. These three vessels were taken between July 11 and July 15, by the Continental ship Reprisal, Captain Lambert Wickes. See Volume 5 and William Bell Clark, Lambert Wickes Sea Raider and Diplomat (New Haven, 1932).

[Extract] Versailles, 24 August 1776

Its quite possible, Sir, that contraband leaves our ports for the Colonies. On our shore, it is only merchandise; at sea, we do not meddle with it unless it is under the protection of our flag and in destination to our possessions. However, I believe that the Dutch take better advantage of this opportunity than we do; they are more skillful than our merchants.

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BORDEAUX, 24 AUGUST 1776."[1]

The French ship Marianne arrived yesterday in this port from St. Marc. She had disembarked there 4 captains and seven English sailors whom a Bostonian Privateer, armed with 12 guns and a crew of 90, had asked her to take on board after meeting her at sea. They relate that this Privateer had already captured 11 prizes, that most of the sailors had joined their party and that they, the captains, and all those who wished to remain loyal to the King of England were left without difficulty on each neutral vessel they met at sea.

They do not know where this privateer sent her prizes. They praise the Captain who allowed them to take their personal effects and who returned 4000# to one of them because he did not find them entered on the consignment of the ships and thought therefore they belonged to him. If we are to believe these officers, the Americans have 64 vessels mounting from 10 to 36 guns, most of which are cruising off the Eastern part of the Newfoundland bank. They form their crews there. They stop all fishermen and sink the vessels. They find men easily because they treat them well and they may rely upon them because it is not in their interest to be caught by the English, besides their fondness for looting. &ca.

My Lord, Admiralty Office 28th Augt 1776

Your Lordship having in your Letter of the 24th Instant acquainted us that you have signified to the Master General of the Ordnance His Majesty's Commands that no Ordnance or Stores should be sent to America onboard any Vessel that did not sail with Convoy, and was not sufficiently manned & armed to defend herself against any of the Rebel Cruizers in case of Separation from the Convoy;[2] and Your Lordship having at the same time inclosed to us, by His Majesty's Command, a Copy of the Letter you have received from Lord Townshend, and an Extract of one which you have received from Lord [Jeffrey] Amherst, in consequence thereof, and signified to us His Majesty's Pleasure, that we should take the same into our Consideration, and acquaint Your Lordship, for His Majesty's Information, whether what is therein proposed can be complied with consistent with the other important Services under our Direction: We have in obedience to His Majesty's Commands maturely considered the Propositions contained in the Copy & Extract of the Letters abovementioned, Vizt

1st, That Ordnance Stores of the most interesting nature be conveyed to the Place of their Destination in America in Forty Gun Ships, for which Purpose two or four might probably be sufficient; or 2dly, That the Master General of the Ordnance be empowered to hire or build Ships of greater force than seems at present to be understood to be within his Department, to be fitted with close Quarters and with a proper Number of Guns & Men, in which case it is represented to be necessary to take Guns from the Naval Stores to be replaced as soon as possible.

With respect to the first Proposition We are to acquaint Your Lordship, for His Majesty's Information, that all His Majesty's Ships of forty Guns are now employed in America, except the Launceston which is condemned & can never go to Sea.

That if His Majesty had more Forty Gun Ships, or other Frigates, than what are now employed, they would all be wanted for the Protection of the various Branches of Trade, and for carrying on the American War; which, by what now appears to us, requires as many Frigates as the late War with France & Spain.

That if Men of War were fit to carry out Stores of any kind, they would of course be employed in our own Department for that Purpose, for Provisions & Stores; but as this Method is not practiced by us, from our Knowledge that it would be perverting them from their proper use as Ships of War; we must, in the strongest manner, represent to His Majesty against their being employed in any other Department.

With respect to the second Proposition, we are not competent Judges of the Expediency of building Ships by the Ordnance, unless it was intended that they should be built in His Majesty's Yards; which we must object to, as there is as much Business in hand in the several Yards as can possibly be executed by all the Artificers that can be procured; but we humbly conceive that the Ordnance may procure armed Ships, more suitable for the purpose of carrying Stores than Men of War; as has been done by that Branch of His Majesty's Government which has taken care of the Victualling of the Army in America.

And as to the employing the Guns, appropriated to the Service of the Navy, to other purposes, we humbly apprehend, that the Ordnance is to furnish Artillery, not only for all the Ships actually on the List of His Majesty's Navy, but for such as may hereafter be added thereto upon any Emergency, and that as we have ordered many new Ships to be built, it will be attended with very fatal Consequences if their Guns are not in readiness for them. We are &ca.

Sandwich H Penton H Palliser

2. This agitation for greater protection of ordnance vessels probably resulted from capture of the powder ship Hope by James Mugford, in Washington's schooner Franklin. See Volume 5.

LORDS COMMISSIONERS, ADMIRALTY, TO CAPTAIN JOHN LEWIS GIDOIN, H.M.S. Richmond, SPITHEAD[1]

King George

Whereas it is of great consequence to His Majestys Service that the Transports named in the Margin, the former being laden with Cloathing, the latter having on board Recruits for His Majts Regiments of Foot in Canada should be safely convoyed to Quebec, You are hereby required & directed to take the said Transports under your Convoy & proceed to Sea with the first opportunity of Wind & Weather & make the best of your way with them to Quebec accordingly taking all possible care yourself & giving the most positive Orders to their Masters respectively that they do not loose Company with you. And whereas we have directed the Navy Board to appoint Mr Horsenail a Midshipman of the Navy to go on board the Mellish with Instructions to superintend the navigating her to explain to her Master the Convoy Instructions & Signals, and in case of separation to Direct the Ships proceedings agreable to the Rendezvous & Orders you may give him & in conjunction with the Officer commanding the Troops put on board her, to assist in defending her against the Cruizers of the Rebels in case she should be attacked, You are farther required & directed to give Mr Horsenail such additional Instructions as you shall judge proper for the purposes aforementioned & to lend to the Mellish from the Ship you command a careful diligent Petty Officer to assist Mr Horsenail in executing the duty with which he is charged, which Petty Officer will be paid by the Navy Board an Allowance to make up his present Pay equal to four Shillings a Day from the time he shall be so employed.[2]

Having seen the said Transport Ships safe to Quebec you are to make the best of your way to join Vice Adml Lord Howe at Sandy Hook, or wherever you may learn his Lordship is, and upon joining him deliver the inclosed Packet to him & follow his orders for your further proceedings.

2. It is interesting to note that the Mellish was the first ship to whom the Lords of the Admiralty sent a midshipman and a petty officer for additional protection against rebel cruisers, and became the first ship, so reinforced, to be taken by one of the said "rebel cruisers," the Continental ship Alfred, Captain John Paul Jones. Before sailing the master of the Mellish had made an affidavit "to defend her in case of being attacked." Ibid., 106/2594.
3. Similar orders were sent this date to Captain James Feattus, H. M. Sloop Vulture at Spithead, to convoy storeships and victualers to Halifax and then report to Admiral Howe at New York. Convoy was also to include H. M. Sloop Hunter. Ibid., 2/101, 284–85.

"Extract of a Letter from Bourdeaux, Aug. 28."[1]

The Count de Marbeuf, Capt. Lochee, from Martinique, who is arrived in the Garonne, spoke on her passage with an American privateer, which had a prize in company. Three gentlemen and a lady from on board her, by leave from their captors, took a passage to Europe with Capt. Lochee, and are safe arrived here. Four English sailors also, with the master of the prize, were suffered to come home in the Count de Marbeuf, the privateer having more prisoners than she could well manage, and being on that account glad of the opportunity to getting rid of them. The gentlemen and lady are sent out for Paris, as is the master of the ship, which I think they say came from Antigua, and the sailors mean to take a passage home in a sloop lading here for London.

London [August 30].

A Letter from Capt. Morgan of the Unity Transport, arrived at Halifax, says, " . . . Off the Isle of Sable, early in the Morning, we saw a Schooner, which seemed inclined to speak with us; about Noon she was only Half a Mile from us, when she fired a Shot to bring us too; she had hoisted no Colours notwithstanding she fired a Shot; we were surprized at this, and could therefore hardly think she was one of our armed Schooners, as the Officer would certainly know his Duty better; we accordingly brought too, but took Care also to get all the Soldiers up, and in Arms, and had them all ready under the Quarter-deck, and out of Sight; she ran under our Stern, and bade us strike to the Congress; on which having four Guns abaft, (all we had on board) we complimented her with a Couple; she then kept on our Bow, and seemed inclined to board us, our Soldiers immediately went forward, and gave them such a Discharge of small Arms, that she found she had caught a Tartar. I believe we killed them five Men at this Fire. She then shot a-head of us, in order, I believe, to consider what to do; the Determination was to leave us, which they did by steering away South, whilst we kept on for Halifax Harbour, not having suffered the least Hurt. The Schooner had ten Guns, and I believe upwards of fifty Hands.["]

A Gentleman is just arrived from Bermuda, and has brought with him a Virginia Gazette, which mentions, that the Goods of the West-India Ships, lately taken being sold, the Owners of the Privateers shared 5000 l. each, and each Sailor had for his Share 500 l. It also adds, that this great Success has infused into most a Spirit for Privateering; and they are fitting out a great Number, in Hopes of picking up many of the next West-India Fleet.

It is said that the States General having received information, that the English have again taken a Dutch vessel from St. Eustatia, under pretence of her being laden with ammunition, &c. for America; they immediately sent orders to the Charge d'Affaires from [sic at] the Court of London, to make the necessary complaints to the British government on that subject, that the above-mentioned prize be given up; and it is reported that their High Mightinesses have requested Sir Joseph Yorke to use his endeavours, that the said vessel be returned, and the owners indemnified for the loss they have sustained by its detention.

Accounts were received Yesterday, that the St. James, of this Port, from Jamaica, that has been missing and was supposed to be foundered, was taken by a Provincial Privateer. The Privateer convoying her to an American Port, was closely pursued by the Sphynx Man of War, and to prevent the St. James being retaken, she ran her on shore. The Man of War secured the People and some Part of her Cargo, and then set fire to the Vessel, to hinder her falling again into the Hands of the Provincials.

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO M. D'ARGOUT [1]

Versailles [31] August 1776[2]

I have received, Sir, your letters Nos. 119 and 122 dated 31 July[3] and 7 August in which you reported the engagement in sight of St. Pierre Road between H.B.M. frigate Shark, Captain Chapman, and the American corvette le Reprise [Reprisal] Captain Lambert Wickes, as well as the request made to you by M. Chapman to the effect that the King's frigate be allowed to seize the Bostonian frigate in St. Pierre Road. His Majesty to whom I reported this matter approved your refusal and the reply you made to Vice admiral Young. The King is convinced that in all cases you will uphold with the same dignity the honor of his arms and that you will never tolerate any violence or insults towards a vessel which would have requested the protection of the forts of the Colony whose command was entrusted to you, or which would be anchored under the protection of the guns of the said Colony or sailing within their range.

But His Majesty, while wishing to protect the right of sanctuary in his ports and roads, does not intend to favor openly the Insurgents in such a pointed way that it would provoke objections on the part of Great Britain: consequently, His Majesty disapproves the assurance you gave to M. Bingham, deputy of the Secret Committee of Congress, that you would support as much as it was within your power the interest of the Insurgents. You believed that you were justified to do so because of the instructions which M. [Thomas] Dorves, Captain of l'aigrette, had been ordered to communicate to you. But there is nothing in these orders that could warrant stretching their meaning as you did, Sir; you did not grasp the spirit of the Instructions. I directed therein the Commanders of His Majesty's frigates to grant the protection of the Flag to the Insurgent Vessels that would come and request it: it is the law of Nations and the right of Sovereigns; but the said Commanders are enjoined by the same Instructions not to move in any way towards the Insurgent Vessels, but to wait until circumstances brought them close enough so that they could ask for the King's protection and not to facilitate through their own manoeuvres those which the said Vessels might make in order to approach His Majesty's ships. You can see, Sir, that these Instructions do not show that His Majesty wishes to support the Insurgents openly; the King is only determined not to tolerate any attempt against the respect to which his Flag is entitled. These Instructions therefore do not authorise you to promise the envoy of the Secret Committee of Congress that you will support with all your power the interest of the Insurgents; by following these Instructions to the letter, you were merely to dissimulate the trade negotiations that this person might have opened, and by grasping the spirit behind these Instructions you were to facilitate secretly as much as it was within your power, but without making any formal declarations to the envoy, the various items which the congress had requested. You must adjust your line of conduct towards the Insurgents, Sir, according to this principle and avoid provoking the objections that Great Britain would have a right to make if His Majesty granted open protection to the Insurgents and supplied them with assistance in order to strengthen their resistance.

Since you have not sent me, Sir, the copy of the reply you made to the envoy of Congress, I suppose[4] that it was made by word of mouth only and that it will be easy to have him look upon the drawing which he will be able to make at Martinique of the items requested by Congress as a trade operation from Nation to Nation and not as an open assistance which France is granting to the Insurgents.

His Majesty has chosen, Sir, to impute to an excess of zeal the positive assurances which you gave to the envoy thinking it was in your power to do so. The King recommends that you use great circumspection and counts no less on our caution and firmness. I have the honor to be with sincere attachment &c.

MARYLAND GOVERNOR ROBERT EDEN'S REPORT[1]

London, September 2. Governor Eden arrived in London from Maryland, but last from Virginia, which he left on the 6th of August. He came in a transport.

Baltimore is fortified with 60 pieces of cannon, 9 pounders. Almost every town is fortified.

The Virginia convention desired the Maryland convention to seize the person of Governor Eden. The Continental Congress requested they would send him to them. Instead of complying with either, they desired the Governor would go on board one of the King's ships; and the president of the convention, and others, attended him to the water side. He went on board the Fowey. While the ship was lying off the coast, some persons of the province went on board her also. The Convention desired the Captain to send those persons ashore. He said they had taken refuge on board his ship, and therefore he could not: upon which the convention declared the truce was broken, and detained a part of Governor Eden's baggage, which had not been put on board with him. Their delegates in the Continental Congress, who had been instructed to vote against independency, and having so voted, had withdrawn from the Congress, were desired to return to the Congress, and act as they thought best for the interest of their country. They accordingly returned to Philadelphia, and acceded, in form, to the vote of independency.

Your Lordship knows, that he is a Man of Ability, and of an active, enterprizing Spirit, and much connected, with that Party, whose Intentions are so hostile to us.

I learnt the other Day, that there is an officer now at la Rochelle, called Chambel, or some such name, who during M de Choiseuils Ministry, was sent several times by him to North America. He is a Protestant and has L'ordre du Merite. as he has no Business at Rochelle, it is very poisible, that he meditates a nother Journey to America. SIR JOHN HART TO THOMAS FARR[1]

Sir, Lisbon, Sept. 5.

I think it proper to acquaint you, that a North American privateer sloop is now cruising on the coasts of this kingdom; she has already taken on the 1st instant, at a few leagues N.W. of cape St. Vincents, the brigantine Mary and James, of London, last from Falmouth, with a rich cargo, and sent away the captain with six of his men, who landed at Setuval and bring this account. They learned farther from the privateer's people, that four other American privateers were now at sea between the Western Islands and Portugal; that she had already made on these coasts five other prizes; and proposed, with a rashness that will not I trust go unpunished, to try a cruize on the Mediterranean coasts of Spain.

I send you this advice, to the end you may take the best precautions in your power for the security of the British trade within your jurisdiction; and am, Sir, [&c.]

P. S. It appears by express just received from Algarve, that of the masters of the vessels taken, three of them put on shore at Algarve prove to be as follows: Gregory Potbury, of the brig Sarah Anna, from Exeter for Gibraltar and Malaga; William Carter, of the snow Lively, from Chester for Genoa; Wm. LORD SANDWICH TO GEORGE III[1]

Admiralty Sept 6. 1776.

Lord Sandwich has the honour to inform your Majesty that finding no trace of the Glasgow transport in this office, (except one of that name that could not possibly be with Sir Peter Parker) he desired Sir Hugh Palliser to write to Captain Hope for what information he could give relative to the vessel that was taken by the Rebels in Carolina.

Lord Sandwich takes the liberty to trouble your Majesty with Sir Hugh Pallissers note covering Capt: Hopes answer, by which it seems plainly to appear that the Company of Highlanders taken in the Glasgow did not belong to any Regiment in your Majesty's service.

Since writing the above Lord Sandwich has found a list of transports (which he sends herewith) in which the Glasgow Packett is named, and appears to be hired in America, & to have gone to the Southward with General Clinton; and Captain Hope is this moment come to Ld Sandwich & tells him, that the company was, he is pretty sure, raised by General Clinton, commanded by a Mr Campbell, & composed chiefly of some Americans that were taken at Sea by the Syren man of war, and some deserters, & that he is positive they belonged to no Regiment.[2]

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] London 6 Sept 1776

. . . in the ports, work is proceeding with the utmost haste on the construction, repair and outfitting of the vessels whose commissioning has been ordered. The number of these last has just been increased by three ships of 74 guns, to wit, the Invi[n]cible, the Elizabeth, and the Prince of Wales. The Admiralty's order specifies that they are to stand guard duty in the ports. Since ships of this firepower can be directed only against us, the only question remaining to be answered is whether these preparations are offensive or defensive: that is, whether England is merely keeping pace with her neighboring powers. You, Monseigneur, are inclined to the latter hypothesis; and I confess that I too shall be so inclined, so long as I do not see impressment put into effect. If this measure is used, I shall be convinced that these people are no longer bluffing and that we have really become their prime target. Thereupon I shall consider war inevitable and shall turn all my thoughts in that direction, rejecting all speculation to the contrary as useless and likely only to lead me into error.

I am keenly aware, Monseigneur, how important it would be for the King's Service to be informed in advance of the British Council's decision on this matter. I very much doubt that any firm one has as yet been taken; and the trouble is that in such cases, cause is swiftly followed by effect. Since the slightest rumor of impressment causes all seamen to take flight, the Government is always extremely careful not to reveal its intention. Very little time is required to have orders signed by the principal magistrate of each locality and to prepare some lighters or other small vessels suitable for carrying them out; proclamation and execution are performed at one and the same time. At sea, even this formality is unnecessary. Under Admiralty orders, the King's ships simply stop merchant vessels and seize most of their crews. . . . But neither should we think that impressment will take effect quickly enough to provide any great attack forces here. Although the secrecy of the operation may procure a large number of men at the outset, progress soon slows down when the alarm is spread. Furthermore, the fleets are never more poorly manned than by impressment, which always catches many more landsmen than mariners. The greatest source of manpower would be that of seamen from coaling vessels, who number about twelve thousand. But since the subsistence of London depends on them, they would not be taken except in dire extremity. . . .

There is in [Portsmouth] at present a fleet of 25 transport vessels, some for Halifax and some for Quebec. This fleet will sail with the first favorable wind, escorted by the frigates Richmond and Mermaid and the sloops Vulture and Hunter. In six weeks from now there will scarcely be a frigate fit for commissioning left in the ports. The same is true of corvettes. As soon as one is built, she is put into commission. The sloop Dispatch at Deptford, and one called the Swift at Portsmouth are cases in point. They are barely launched, and their commissioning has already been ordered. Despite the considerable number of these frigates and corvettes, which may be regarded as the Navy's light troops and which are all being employed in America, American privateers continue to capture prizes rather frequently. . . . I have no doubt that these privateers will appear in the Channel this winter and will make themselves very troublesome to English shipping.

LETTER FROM DUBLIN[1]

[Extract] Sept. 7

A Vessel belonging to this City arrived last Thursday from Antigua; the Master and Owner of which I am well acquainted with; the Master informed me, that, after he had left Antigua about four Days, he was chased by an American Privateer of 16 Carriage Guns, which Vessel soon came up with him; she proved to be the Surprizal of Philadelphia, Captain Weeks, Commander,[2] who obliged Captain Cathrow (the Name of my Friend) to come on board his Ship, and bring his Bills of Lading, Register, and several other Papers, by which it appearing the Vessel and Cargo were entirely Irish Property, the Master of the Privateer immediately discharged him without the smallest Injury.[3] I hope they may continue these Favours; it being by some thought incredible; the Master Yesterday made Oath before our Chief Magistrate of the Facts, which Affidavit I have just read.

1. Public Advertiser, London, September 17, 1776.
2. The Continental ship Reprisal, Captain Lambert Wickes.
3. Almon, ed., Remembrancer, III, 268, provides another account of this incident:

> The Dutchess of Leinster, belonging to Dublin, arrived there from Antigua, Sept. 3, with rum, in six weeks and four days. The Captain says that in latitude 20, and longitude 60, he was chaced and boarded by the Surprizal privateer, belonging to Philadelphia, Capt. Weeks, of 16 guns; that being carried on board the privateer, on examining his papers, the vessel and cargo being found Irish property, the Captain of the privateer said, that he would not distress him, because he was sure the Irish would not distress them. After keeping him on board for about half an hour, he gave Him up the vessel and cargo, and wished him a safe passage. There were on board the privateer, Captain Robinson, of the Neptune of Irvine, from Antigua, with rum; a Captain belonging to London from Grenada; and a Captain belonging to Bristol, from St. Kitts, all prisoners, and their vessels sent to North America, because they were British property.

M. GARNIER TO VERGENNES[1]

[Extract] [London] 10 September 1776

. . . I beg you to recall, Monseigneur, Lord Sandwich's remark of a few months ago to the Naval Commissioner of Portsmouth concerning a commissioning during the summer: that it was to show the neighboring Powers that despite all the forces being employed in America, England still had enough left to defend herself at home.

388-825 O - 73 - 40

I had the honor of informing you earlier about a large ship called the Elephant which the government has purchased for commissioning as a warship. She is now receiving her guns and will come down the Thames within a few days. The Admiralty has just purchased another ship of 300 tons called the Brilliant which it is also going to commission. All this is for lack of frigates, of which there are scarcely any left here, so many of them being used up by the war in America. However large the number of such ships employed as escorts may be, it is far from sufficient, as you can judge, Monseigneur, from the daily losses being suffered by the West Indies trade. Insurance on the safe return of ships in this trade, which never went above six percent during the last war, stands at eighteen today. The British Isles are short of foodstuffs, timber, &c., and colonists are losing about thirty percent because of rising costs of operation.

. . . So there we have it: preparations for continuing the war in America, and a large fleet in Europe to restrain us. Seen in this light everything becomes clear. From any viewpoint whatsoever, the only possible conclusion seems to be that the situation calls for the greatest precautions on our part. . . .

We have no news from Staten Island except that on the 17th of July last, Lord Howe had not yet arrived there.[2] You will recall, Monseigneur, that he sailed from Halifax on June 23d.

With the Court's consent, I have established over the past few years the practice of reclaiming French seamen from aboard English warships; and just now I have requested and obtained from Lord Sandwich the freedom of one Tabey, a Breton sailor who was on board the Royal Oak at Portsmouth. As soon as he arrives here, I shall provide him with what he needs to return to France.

VERGENNES TO M. GARNIER[1]

[Extract] Versailles 14 Sept 1776

We have reports to the effect that Admiral Howe has at last joined his brother at Staten Island; but the same reports assure us that the General and the Admiral have made no move as yet against New York. . . .

You will find enclosed, Sir, a copy of the statement made to the Admiralty of Bordeaux by Capt. du Brocq, arriving from Santo Domingo. From this document you will see what acts of violence English ships cruising in American waters are continuing to commit against our vessels. It is most important that we have this stopped, for it is sowing fear and dismay among our traders. The Court of London should scarcely refuse to heed our complaints, since it has been assuring us at every turn of its fairness, its love of peace and its desire to avoid anything which might in any way endanger peace. It is the King's wish, Sir, not only that you urge the English ministers to give the sternest and most explicit orders to the officers commanding Great Britain's ships, but also that you officially request the punishment of M. Judd, commanding the frigate Anteloppe, and of M. Young, captain of the Fremony [Pomona].[2] The conduct of these two officers is too clearly contrary to the intentions of their Sovereign for the latter not [to] express his displeasure or for him to let them go unpunished.

"A LETTER FROM THE HAGUE, SEPT. 17."[1]

Sir Joseph Yorke has made application to the States of Holland to forbid the Americans entering any of their ports in the West-Indies, and also the carrying on any trade whatsoever with them. The answer given to Sir Joseph is said to be this, that Holland only considered itself as a commercial country, and that any check to its trade must be severely felt by its inhabitants; that the West-Indies received great part of their support from the Continent of America, which it would be very ill policy in them to put a stop to, and indeed would be almost impossible, as hardly any commands would tie a people down when they were in want of provisions; and that Sir Joseph might assure his court, that they had hitherto, and would still continue to prevent any military stores being furnished to the Americans from any part of the dominions belonging to the states. — Their present trade with the Americans is exceedingly beneficial to them.

Dear Sir: Bordeaux, September 17, 1776.

I shall send you in October clothing for twenty thousand men, thirty thousand fusils, one hundred tons of powder, two hundred brass cannon, twenty four brass mortars, with shells, shot, lead, etc. in proportion. I am to advise you that if in future you will give commissions to seize Portuguese ships you may depend on the friendship and alliance of Spain.[2] Let me urge this measure. Much may be got, nothing can be lost by it. Increase, at all events, your navy. I will procure, if commissioned, any quantity of sail cloth and cordage. A general war is undoubtedly at hand in Europe, and consequently America will be safe if you baffle the arts and arms of the two Howes through the summer. Every one here is in your favor. Adieu. I will write you again next week.

Secret No 78 Paris Sepr 18th 1776

I have already observed to Your Lordship, that there now prevails here a pretty general opinion, that the public Tranquillity will not continue long, and that this unhappy Business will bring on a War in which Great Britain and France will soon find themselves involved[2]

It begins to be whispered, that a large body of Troops has rece'd orders to march to the Coast of Britany, others Say that the orders are only for the Troops to hold themselves in Readiness to March. As far as I have Yet been able to Trace this Report, it seems to me My Lord to take its Rise, from the orders given to the Six Battalions which are designed for the French West India Islands. The sending this Reinforcement seems to be a fixt Measure, and the Reason given for it is, That at a time when our Colonies are in a flame, and when there is so much reason to apprehend a War in South America, Every Principle of Prudence, and self Preservation, calls upon France to put Her Colonies in a proper posture of Defence. This may be the real Truth, but as Your Lordship sees better than I do, it may likewise be a Colour for the most Insidious, and Dangerous Designs. At the same time that I throw out this general, and very obvious Reflexion, I must add, that it rests wholly upon vague suspicion, and on that Caution and mistrust that naturally lead me to think of the worst that can happen, where so much is at Stake.

LORD GRANTHAM TO LORD WEYMOUTH[1]

No. 45 [Madrid] 19th September 1776

I am well informed that orders have been sent to the several Ports for an account of the American vessels which have put into them, and the returns will probably be soon made; in the mean time I enclose to Your Lordship the advices which I have received from Cadiz and Malaga on that subject. This intelligence will undoubtedly affect the Spanish, as well as our commerce, and ought to point out to this Court the propriety, even the necessity of cooperating with His Majesty in crushing as much as possible, the success of the American vessels.

Dr. Edward Bancroft to Silas Deane[1]

[Extract]

. . . You will see by the Papers that a Total end is put to Lord Dunmore's Piratical Depredations; many hundreds of the Whites & Negroes which he had assembled being cut of[f] by sickness; above twenty of his Vessels taken or burnt, and the rest all dispersed & removed from that part of the Continent. So may the Enemies of America always prosper. The distresses of Barbadoes have extorted a very Lamentable Petition from the people of that Island, and a Gentleman is arrived here from Bermudas with a Memorial stating the incapacity of that Island to subsist without Provisions from the United Colonies, and intimating that if the Bermudians are not permitted to Bring Provisions from thence without interruption from British Cruizers, it will be necessary for them to ask both Subsistence & Protection from the Congress. . . .

From Quebec I hear that all attempts to Transport the Vessels sent out from hence, over the Falls of Chamblee in to Lake Champlain (by the help of Machines called Cammels) have proved fruitless, and that early in August it was found necessary to build Vessels on the Lake to Convoy Burgoyne's Army to Crownpoint, and that for this purpose all the Ship Carpenters in Canada were called together; and as this business will doubtless employ them until winter, we may, I think, make ourselves easy respecting the Operations in that Province. . . .

"Copy of a Letter from Capt. Braithwaite, of the Hampden Packet Boat, dated Falmouth, Sept. 20."[1]

Sept. 5, I received the Mail, and sailed from Lisbon, with the wind to the northward. I received as passengers, Mr. Scot, Mr. Fisher, and Mr. Smith, and, as distressed subjects, Capt. Thomas Moor, his Mate, and five of his people, being the Master and part of the crew of the Mary and James, of Falmouth, bound from London to Salerno, Naples, and Messina, but last from Falmouth, having sailed from thence the 20th of August, with a cargo worth between 20,000 l. and 30,000 l. and was taken the 1st inst. on the coast of Portugal, 14 leagues N.W. from Cape St. Vincent, (in sight of Mount Chigo) by an American privateer of eight carriage guns, and a number of swivels, commanded by Simon Forester, an Irishman, well known at Lisbon and Falmouth. The privateer was sloop rigged, and called the Rover; it being little wind, and rowing with twelve oars, she soon came up with Capt. Moor. She had taken before six sail on the coast, whose people she landed at Faro. The 22d of August a Guineaman, from Bristol, John Baker, Master, engaged her, but blew up in the action, and only three men saved out of 28. They stripped Capt. Moor and his people of every thing, and even threatened their lives, and sent the prize directly for America; the next day, being about eight leagues from Cape Spichell, they gave Capt. Moor his boat, in which he reached Setuval that night. The Captain of the privateer would not tell what place he belonged to,[2] but said there were 150 sail of them fitted out of different ports of America. The people told Capt. Moor they belonged to Salem, and that several more had sailed from thence for the coast of Spain and Portugal.

José de Gálvez to the Governor of Havana[1]

. . . This background[2] has led the King to consider the matter; and reflecting that closing his Ports to the Americans will be followed by their declaration of enmity toward Spain, and by the seizure of our ships on all the Seas indiscriminately, leaving us without the least expedient for a reparation or even to punish this attack: His Majesty has decided that these same Americans be admitted cordially into Spanish Ports, although they may be flying their own Flag instead of the British one, and that if the English Court protest against it, let it see that the King cannot abandon the Commerce of his Subjects to such risks when it is certain that [neither] His British Majesty nor his Ministry would feel compelled to indemnify the damage which the rebellious Colonials would cause us.

For myself I have already notified Our Governors in utmost confidence on how to welcome and treat the vessels of the English Colonies in Spanish Ports, advising them that if an American privateer enter with a captured ship of any Nation, it must not be prevented from doing so, supposing that the prize vessel is flying the same Flag as the capturing ship, and that on equal terms an English privateer entering with an American prize must not be molested.

. . . although they [orders to West Indies ports] generally prohibit access to friendly or enemy Foreigners, it should be understood that the Americans with their own Flag or with any prize must be welcomed and treated in cases of urgency and known need with the same hospitality which would be extended to the English or the French.

All of which I advise Your Lordship by Order of the King so that you dispose at once what is suitable for complying in the Ports of your Jurisdiction in specific cases and with the idea that it is the Royal wish of His Majesty to give haven to Colonial vessels out of hospitality, but not permit them to sell goods or any Trade, and only to make repairs and buy necessities, paying the amount in coin, banknotes, or Negro Slaves. . . .

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BRISTOL, SEPT. 22."[1]

Captain Graves, of the Elinor, is arrived here from Barbadoes, which Place he left the 19th of August, and says, that before he sailed a Vessel arrived from Bermudas; the Master of which told him that the Captain of a Privateer that had put in there to heave down his Ship said, that he had taken among other Vessels a Captain Craig, from Liverpoole. The Black River, Currie, sailed the 20th of July from Dominica for Bristol: On the 2d of August, in Lat. 31. Long 63. was taken by the Enterprize Privateer, Captain [James] Campbell, of Baltimore, in Maryland, who had taken the Lancashire, Jones, from Jamaica to Liverpool; a Brig from ditto to England, and a Brig from St. Croix to Guernsey; a Sloop of Dartmouth from Barbadoes to Newfoundland, and had taken the James, Higgins, from Antigua to Lancaster, on board of whom the Privateer put the Mate of the Black River, and several Men; the Mate and Part of the People rose upon the Provincials, retook her, and brought her into Bristol. They afterwards fell in with the Tender belonging to the Nautilus Sloop of War which was at Bermudas, and put on board a Prize Master, and four of the Privateers Men.[2] The Privateer intended going on the Coast of Portugal in the Winter. The Privateer had taken a Sloop belonging to Tortola for Newfoundland, which they gave up to the Captain, and put on board her twenty-four Seamen, and a Mr. Wilcock, a Passenger of the James. The Privateer was a Schooner of eight Guns, and had sixty Men when she came out, and rowed with Oars.

[Extract] Versailles, 22nd September 1776

. . . The importations from America will place in our ports the provisions and goods which England used to carry to the other nations of Europe. Re-exportation will offer to merchants a vast and fresh field for lucrative speculation, the success of which appears assured; and will go to diminish that kind of trade which formed one of the most important branches of the advantages which England reaped from America.

. . . I do not think that it is necessary to free the American goods from all duties. The favor which they deserve to experience in the present juncture is doubtless great, and you know that I think we should grant them great facilities, but we must distinguish between those which may be advantageous and those which might serve as a precedent in the future. It is important, from the beginning of this trade, to establish a basis fit to be preserved when events shall have consolidated the independence of the Colonies, and when their trade with us shall have taken a free and regular course. If we grant them total exemption now, this kindness would become bitterness when the necessity arrived to subject them to prestations and curtail the total exemption to which she would be accustomed, and as we should then have more competitors than now, the effect of this return to our principles might be dangerous.

I do not indulge, Sir, in all the details which this discusson might require; your knowledge will supply them; what I have just said will suffice to make you feel the motive which induced me to think that it is important to impose a duty of some sort on the importations from America: but I am at the same time of opinion that such duty should be as moderate as possible, that the Americans should be ranked with the most favoured nation, or be subjected to a single and fixed duty of 3%, for example. . . .

. . . Everyone must shut his eyes to the exportation of munitions and implements of war, and the registers must not contain any item nor any indication of this connivance, entire liberty being left to the Americans to load and export as they please the articles in question.

The Prizes were sent for Boston, and 15 of their Crews put on board a French Ship, who landed them at Havre. The Captain of the Sloop is an Irishman, who had lost his Property, and his Vessel made a Prize of by an English Man of War, when trading in full Security; and on his Return to America, he procured the Command of this Sloop in order to cruize against the Nation that had stripped him of his All, and he had no Resource left but Retaliation.

"The Ship Anne was chased by three Privateers a whole Day, near the Coast of America, but outsailed them. Next Morning the Ship was becalmed, and the Privateers, by Favour of their Oars, rowed up, two under her Stern, and one upon her Bow, by which the Anne's Guns could not bear; but indeed she had only two Carriage Guns, and two Swivels put on Carriages for Show. 'Tis hardly possible to express the Consternation at New Lloyd's Coffee-House, on Monday, at the Arrival of the News of the taking the seven Straits-men by the Rover Privateer; many a long Face was seen, and very few inclinable to do Business, unless upon very good Policies.

Monday after the Publication of the News of the taking the Straightsmen by the Rover Privateer, many Policies were offered on homeward-bound Ships from Leghorn, Genoa, &c. but nothing was done on account of the very great Premium demanded.

Captain Dunlop, of the Margaret, who is arrived at Milford from St. Croix, was taken on his Passage by an American Privateer near the Bermudas, which, after keeping him for several Days, released him, and is supposed to be gone after some of the Leeward Island Fleet, which he had some Intelligence of.

The Complaints raised against the Captain of the Argo Frigate are entirely groundless, as it appears from some Passengers arrived in Part of the Fleet, that the Separation of the Fleet from the Convoy was intirely the Will of the Masters of the Ships, who thinking themselves out of all Danger, would no longer be under any Restraint, but each would make the best of his Way.

Mr Cyrus [Silas] Deane who in some Companies calls himself a Native of Bermudas but who is well known here to be a North American and a Secret agent for the Congress is certainly in constant intercourse with Beaumarchais who was lately not worth a shilling but has now Millions at his Command. He keeps a Table and entertains Deane and other Americans and friends to their cause. He is likewise, as I am well assured, in regular Correspondence with Mr. [John] Wilkes. Their Letters are not trusted to the Post but sent by Private Hands. When I learnt this I immediately suspected that Wilkes is not the only Person in England with whom Beaumarchais Corresponds. My Suspicion is right, there are several other Persons, I do not yet know their Names, but hope to get them soon. . . .

Mr. Deane received Letters of Importance from the Congress by the Ship that arrived at Nantes from Philadelphia the beginning of this Month. He gave out a few days ago that He was going to Geneva, but He is still at

I was taken by a privateer called the Rover, a sloop of eight carriage guns and 14 swivels; when she left America she had on board 80 men, but when they took me they had only 38. The Captain's name is Simon Thomson [sic Simon Forrester]; where she belonged to; I could not learn from them. They appeared more like pirates than any thing else. They had taken six vessels before mine, but I do not remember any of their names; she had also an engagement with a snow belonging to Bristol, Capt. Bates, which blew up after fighting six hours; only three of the crew were saved out of 26,[1] two of whom were landed on the coast of Algarve, with three masters of vessels and their crews, and the others entered on board the privateer. PRINCE MASSERANO TO MARQUIS DE GRIMALD[1]

London, 27 September 1776

In reply to Your Excellency's letter of the Ninth of this month in which you informed me of what transpired between the Spanish brigantine La Vierge du Carmel on her return to Cadiz from Havana, and a British frigate commanded by Captain Maximillian Jacobs,[2] I shall inform Your Excellency that I conveyed my protests to Mylord Suffolk at the conference. He replied that he had given the clearest and most positive orders in order to avoid any similar difficulties. I replied that the officers ought to be punished most severely for the simple reason that they could not pretend to be ignorant of them. Mylord was surprised that the frigate had fired a round-shot. I said to him that doubtless our brigantine had resisted the search, as she had every right to, and I reminded him of the steps I had taken here as a precaution before the ships of war left their ports with orders to stop the Americans. I added that if the brigantine had been stronger, she would have answered the British frigate with a cannon shot, and that the two vessels might have engaged in an action which perhaps might have produced unfortunate consequences. They will result one day from the arrogance of the British officers, if they are not restrained, for in time of peace one does not search the vessels of a friendly Power, nor open their mail packets. He told me that the Americans were resorting to so many subterfuges in order to arrive at their ends that the officers of their Navy were at a loss as to what to do. I answered that in a packet of paper there could hardly be any powder or shot, and that several days earlier His Majesty had ordered me to tell the British Minister that he had given the most rigorous orders prohibiting the supply of munitions of war to the rebels. He replied they were very satisfied with the good faith of our King, and that they had many proofs of it, and that the assurances given to Mylord Grantham were consistent with my manner of explanation here.

I said to him that I served only to carry out the orders of the King whom I knew was very desirous of maintaining good harmony with England. He replied to me in this manner:

> With you who are my friend, I can explain myself differently than with anyone else. Your Excellency sees our situation and that we do not desire war with anyone. But if our success in America were such as we would hope, with the experience that we have at present, we would find ourselves in a position to make a firmer and more solid general peace than exists today, for the good of all monarchies.

I answered that this hope for a more solid peace between Spain and England would bring pleasure to the King who thinks likewise and who wishes only to keep that which he possesses without seeing it usurped by anyone.

Reflecting on this type of overture to which I only accord as much trust as it deserves, I do not know who caused it, whether the fear of seeing ourselves armed and the desire to remove from ourselves the fear of seeing them invade our possessions in America with the troops that they have in the Colonies, or the desire to give me to understand that they are not in a position to be able to support Portugal and that they will not support her, even if they were to succeed in America. I perceive these two motives there, but I do not know the one upon which to lay stress. But I still believe that we must remain armed and await events.

I shall finish this dispatch by telling Your Excellency that Mylord Suffolk promised me to deliver my note to Mylord Weymouth, the one which I gave him containing the names of the Captains of the brigantine and the frigate in order that he might make a report to His Britannic Majesty.

"EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PLYMOUTH DOCK, DATED SEPT. 27, 1776."[1]

Arrived here last Monday the Brig, Samuel, from Nantz, in thirty-two Days [sic], bound to Petersburgh, belonging to Stockton, the Master's name Watson; he says that when he left Nantz, there were no less than twelve or fourteen Ships, Brigs, Schooners, &c. in that Port, belonging to different Ports in America, loading with Military Stores, &c. They bring Wheat and Flour in exchange. The Day he sailed, a large Ship, Burthen 400 Tons, left the same Port, bound to America, called the Hancock and Adams, commanded by one Smith, who was cautious in mentioning what Part of America he was bound to, or what his Cargo consisted of. Capt. Watson was several Times in Company with him, but could learn no Intelligence that was material. The Day before he sailed, he was examined by Order of the Commandant of the Port, when a Quantity of contraband Stores was found on board of him, which he was obliged to re-land; but the same Night they were re-shipped again, with a great deal more. The Mate of the above Brig was on board of the American, when he took on board 2000 Stands of Arms, 321 Barrels of Gunpowder, and 70 Barrels of Saltpetre, besides many other Implements of War, this Vessel had but a few Swivels on board, and might have been taken by the smallest Cruizer in our Service. Not one of the Yankees seemed calculated to make any Resistance, but depended entirely on Dame Fortune.

The above Account was confirmed by the Mate of the Samuel, (who was the Master's Son) the Carpenter of her, and two of her Hands; they were all examined by the Principal Officers of this Port, and every one of them agreed exactly with the Master's Report. The Master told me, that his Mate and People knew much more of the Affair than he did, they being often among the small Vessels, and very conversant with the American Crews, the Masters of which Vessels were quite open, and no way reserved in transacting their Business, speaking publicly of what they were to load with, and where they were bound to. A Schooner and Sloop had almost compleated their Cargoes, and would sail in a few Days after the English Vessel's Departure. The French seemed to take little or no Notice of their Proceedings, only now and then inspecting a Vessel to keep up Appearances. In fact, the Captain, Mate, and Crew of the Samuel, declare, that the Business of the Americans was transacted with a Degree of Barefacedness, that none, but People well pleased with their Company, could overlook. They affirm likewise, that a ten Gun Sloop could take twenty such Vessels for the Resistance they could make. Undoubtedly a few Cruizers off Cape Finisterre, would pick up Numbers of those Adventurers, with very little Trouble. The Hancock and Adam's Cargo was reported to be worth 35000 Pounds Sterling.

There have been several Vessels here from America some of whom We have reason to believe found means, though contrary to the Orders of Government, to procure Military stores and we believe some of them picked up Sailors of different Nations who were allured by the prospect of making their Fortunes in the American Service. cretia John Saly Master. The other single decked pierced for carrying ten Guns called the Samuel John Hutchins Master. These Vessels have yet got no Loading and it is impossible to say when they may part it is said they are waiting for dry Goods. All the American Vessels that have come here have brought Flour, Lumber, Potatoes and a few furs; We are strongly of opinion that the Ships said to be taken off the Coast of Portugal by an American Privateer were taken by some of the American ships that went from hence as one or two of them had a Number of Guns in the Hold and picked up straggling Sailors, which with what the other Ships could spare them these were sufficient to take any Merchantman unprovided.

My Lord, Whitehall, 28th September 1776

The late advices from Virginia representing the Earl of Dunmore's Situation to be so much changed from what it was at the time his Lordship transmitted the Demand of Military Stores inclosed in my letter to your Lordship of the 18th of April, that his Lordship has it not in his power to carry on any Military Operations against the Rebels in that Province, and there is good ground to suppose he has been obliged to quit his Government, and retire to the Army under General Howe, his Lordship, consequently, can have no occasion for the supply of Military Stores contained in that Demand; I have, therefore, received his Majesty's Command to recall the orders contained in my said letter to your Lordship of the 18th April, directing the sending out the said Military Stores to Virginia and your Lordship will be pleased to give the necessary directions for preventing the Embarkation of any part thereof, or for the relanding of the same in case any part has been embarked. "Extract of a Letter from Dover, Sept. 30."[1]

Saturday passed by here two ships from Philadelphia, and one armed transport from America, with an American privateer which she had taken; the wind blowing very hard, they did not stay for a pilot. Yesterday a Dutch ship put 16 sailors on shore here, being part of the crews of the following ships, viz. the Anne brig of Liverpool, Capt. Wise, from St. Vincent's, taken the 1st of September in lat. 36, long. 35, by an American privateer of ten guns and 14 swivels; a brig belonging to Corke, from Grenada, commanded by Captain Casey (the name of the privateer that took the above was the Revenge, belonging to Rhode Island) and the—, from Tobago, bound to London, taken by a schooner of 10 guns. All the crews of the above ships (except the 16 landed here) it is said entered into the service of the Congress.

E. has reason to mistrust such extraordinary and expensive measures, which that Power would not take without serious motives in circumstances of great pressure exerted on it, as they are not suitable steps for its visible object of persistently subjecting its Colonies. SILAS DEANE TO THE COMMITTEE OF SECRET CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS[1]

[Extract] Paris, October 1, 1776

. . . For Heaven's sake, if you mean to have any connection with this kingdom [France], be more assiduous in getting your letters here. I know not where the blame lies, but it must be heavy somewhere, when vessels are suffered to sail from Philadelphia and other ports quite down to the middle of August without a single line. This circumstance was urged against my assertions, and was near proving a mortal stab to my whole proceedings. . . .

. . . The stores are collecting, and I hope will be embarked by the middle of this month; if later, I shall incline to send them to Martinique, on account of the season. It is consistent with a political letter to urge the remittance of the fourteen thousand hogsheads of tobacco wrote for formerly in part payment of those stores; if you make it twenty, the public will be the gainers as the article is rising fast; in Holland, seven stivers 10 lb. and must be in proportion here. You are desired by no means to forget Bermuda; if you should, Great Britain will seize it this winter, or France on the first rupture . . . As your navy is increasing, will you commission me to send you duck for twenty or thirty sail? I can procure it for you to the northward on very good terms, and you have on hand the produce wanted to pay for it with. Have you granted commissions against the Portuguese? All the friends to America in Europe call loudly for such a measure.

Would you have universal commerce, commission some person to visit every kingdom on the continent that can hold any commerce with America. Among them by no means forget Prussia. Grain will be in demand in this kingdom and in the south of Europe. Permit me again to urge an increase of the navy. Great Britain is calling in her Mediterranean passes, to expose us to the Algerines. I propose applying to this court on that subject. . . .

P.S. — An agent from Barbadoes is arrived in London to represent their distress; another from Bermuda, with a declaration to the ministry of the necessity of their being supplied with provisions from the Colonies, and saying that, if not permitted, they must ask the protection of the Congress.

I have to urge your sending to me either a general power for the purpose, or a number of blank commissions for vessels of war. It is an object of the last importance, for in this time of peace between the nations of Europe I can be acquainted with the time of every vessel's sailing either from England or Portugal, and by dispatching little vessels armed from hence, and to appearance property of the subjects of the United States of America, to seize them while unsuspicious on this coast, and to stand directly for America with them, great reprisals may be made; and persons of the first property have already solicited me on the occasion; indeed, they have such an opinion of my power that they have offered to engage in such an adventure if I would authorize them with my name; but this might as yet be rather dangerous. It is certainly, however, a very practicable and safe plan to arm a ship here as if for the coast of Africa or the West Indies, wait until some ship of value is sailing from England or Portugal, slip out at once and carry them on to America. When arrived, the armed vessel increases your navy and the prize supplies the country.

It is of importance, as I have mentioned in my former letters, to have some one deputed and empowered to treat with the King of Prussia. I am acquainted with his agent here, and have already through him received some queries and proposals respecting American commerce, to which I am preparing a reply. I have also an acquaintance with the agent of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, who proposes fixing a commerce between the United States and Leghorn, but has not as yet given me his particular thoughts. France and Spain are naturally our allies; the Italian States want our flour and some other articles; Prussia, ever pursuing her own interests, needs but be informed of some facts relative to America's increasing commerce to favor us; Holland will pursue its system, now fixed, of never quarreling with any one on any occasion whatever. In this view is seen at once the power we ought to apply to and gain a good acquaintance with. Let me again urge you on the subject of tobacco. Receive also from me one hint further. It is this: Should you apportion a certain tract of the western land, to be divided at the close of this war among the officers and soldiers serving in it and make a generous allotment, it would, I think, have a good effect in America, as the poorest soldiers would then be fighting literally for a freehold; and in Europe it would operate beyond any pecuniary offers. I have no time to enlarge on the thought, but may take it up hereafter; if I do not, it is an obvious one, and, if capable of execution, you can manage it to the best advantage.

Whereas the Secret Committee of the East India Company have applied to Us for Convoy to the four homeward bound East India Ships named in the Margin, which are now on their Passage from the East Indies, and in order to shew the Tract usually pursued by their Ships at this Season of the Year, have transmitted to Us, the Journals of four of their Ships, also named in the Margin, together with an Extract from the Journals of their Ships arrived this Year, shewing the Longitude they make in crossing the Line, and in the Lattitude of 15d and 39d North; And whereas we think fit that you shall proceed to Sea in His Majesty's Ship under your command to look out for, and convoy the said four homeward bound Ships to England; You are hereby required and directed to put to Sea accordingly with the first opportunity of Wind and Weather, and make the best of your way to the Island of Fayal, where you are to use the utmost dispatch in taking on board three Months Wine for the Use of the Ships Company; And having so done, You are to proceed from thence to the Westward as far as the Meridian of the Island of Coroo, and then to the Southward, until you arrive in the Lattitude of 15d No unless you shall sooner fall in with the said East India Ships which you are diligently to look out for, keeping for that purpose as nearly as may be in the Tract you shall judge, from a careful perusal of the abovemention'd Journals & Extracts (which will herewith be delivered to you) they will most probably pursue. When you arrive in the Lattitude of 15d No You are to cruize in that Lattitude for 14. days, unless you fall in with the India Ships sooner, and then return, as near as you can, in the same tract, till you come into the Lattitude of the Island of Coroo; And if you shall not then have met with any of the said Ships, you are to make Cape Finisterre, and thence proceed to Plymouth, and wait for further Orders.

If you fall in with any of the Company's Ships abovemention'd, you are to take them under your Convoy, and make the best of your way with them to Plymouth; unless from the Information you may receive from their Captains there should be a probability of your falling in with more of the said Ships, in which case, you are to cruize for such a time, and on such a Station, as in your discretion & judgement you may think most likely for meeting with them.

If you should fall in with two of the abovemention'd Ships, or with the Talbot alone, which is supposed to be the most valuable Ship of the four, You are then to return with them, or her to England, without waiting for any others, unless there is a great probability of meeting with them in a few days.

But as from private Letters lately received, there is ground to believe that the Grenville may have been loaden from Madrass, in which case, she will be equally rich in her Cargo as the Talbot, You are therefore upon falling in with only one of those Ships, to wait a few days longer for the other, notwithstanding what is directed by the foregoing Clause, unless you shall be furnish'd with Intelligence that the Grenville has not been loaden from Madrass.

While you are employed in this Service you are carefully to look out for any Ships or Vessels belonging to His Majesty's Rebellious Colonies in North America, and to use your best endeavours to take or destroy such of them as you may fall in with.

Upon your return to Plymouth, you are to acquaint Our Secretary for Our Information with your arrival & proceedings, and at the same time return the beforemention'd Journals of the East India Ships. Given &c. the 2d Octr 1776. —

"Extract of an authentic Letter from Captain Underwood, dated Lisbon, Oct. 2."[1]

On the 6th of September last we sailed from Plymouth for this port with bale goods, and met with little interruption till we arrived off the Rock of Lisbon (though we saw two vessels in the Bay of Biscay, which we judged to be American privateers, and though they gave chace we soon lost sight of them) when we made a sail which bore directly down upon us, and proved, as we expected, an American sloop privateer, mounting eight guns; having a stern of her a brig which we judged to be a prize; we crouded all our sail, but she gained upon us, and was within gun shot, when a large ship appeared on our larboard quarter, upon which the privateer hauled her wind, and bore away with crouded sails. The ship that thus timely appeared in our favour was a Portuguese frigate of 40 guns, sent out to cruise against three privateers that infest the coast, one of which she had taken. We arrived after this safe in the Tagus, where there were many English ships waiting for convoy.

I received on the 16h past by the Argo your Letter of the 24h of July last and immediately laid the same with its Inclosures before my Lords Commrs of the Admiralty

Their Lordships were greatly pleased to see, in your former Letter of the 1st of July that it was your intention to send the Argo to England with the Trade which were to sail in August and immediately communicated it to the Merchants concerned in that Trade that they might, regulate their Insurances accordingly, You will therefore readily conceive how much their Lordships were surprized and concerned to find by the Copy of the Argo's Orders in the Inclosures abovementioned that instead of sending her to England with the Trade, you had left her Captain at liberty to part from them in the Latitude of 38° No and leave them to shift for themselves, which he accordingly did, and came to Spithead without one of them; a proceedure which has given great disgust to the Merchants and very justly, as it endangered their property and affected many of them in the Re-insurances they were obliged to make upon the occasion

Their Lordships cannot conceive what could induce you to depart from your original intention, so well founded respecting the Convoy abovementioned But to guard against any thing of that kind hereafter, they command me to signify their direction to you not to fail for the future in sending the Convoys home with the Trade to England

I have only to add that I received by the Conveyance abovementioned your Letter of the 31st of July relative to the Action which the Shark Sloop had with an american Armed Vessel near the Island of Martinico, and having laid the same with its Inclosures before their Lordships, Copies thereof were immediately transmitted to the Secretary of State for His Majesty's Information. M. Garnier to Vergennes[1]

[Extract]
No. 57 London, 4 October, 1776

My Lord, I have received dispatch number 38 with which you honored me, dated the 28th of the month.

You are now sure that there was no action on Long Island before the 20th of August. Our news extends no further. It is very possible and much to be hoped that later news will arrive in France sooner than here.

Starting from the time of the arrival of the Hessians on Staten Island August 12 and calculating the time necessary as much to refresh troops tired from a long crossing as to arrange all of the campaign equipment so as to be under canvas upon unloading, it is not thought that any large action can occur before the month of September. It is probable that General Howe will want to start off with all of his strength, and in this case, 20 days are not too much for him to prepare for action. You will even see later, My Lord, that this is not enough to execute the plan of attack upon which it is said that the English general has decided.

Never has such a small island had so many ships assembled around it. At the departure of the last ship, there were no fewer than 500 sail there. Many people, upon hearing this, flatter themselves that the very view of this fleet will throw the enemy army into fear and confusion.

Dutch Conception of the British Landing at New York.

However, it does not appear that General Howe himself judges the situation in this way, since his last letter no longer makes any mention of the hopes he had in the preceding one about the favorable disposition of part of the colonies and of the numerous partisans of the Government. The troops have arrived and he now concerns himself only with the means of starting the operations of the campaign without loss of time.

The Americans can form no obstacle to it. Not yet having any fleet, they are necessarily on the defensive. It is even generally expected that, unable to resist such a large army of regular troops supported by a numerous fleet, they will be chased out of New York. The object of the English general is not to buy this victory too dearly. To do this, he intends to force them to abandon their fortifications without striking a blow, and here is the plan of operations which people are giving. Lord Cornwallis with a detached corps is supposed to go around Long Island, enter the Sound, and land at New Rochelle. This operation would require time, for many different winds are required to execute it. General Clinton will land on Long Island to carry the American outposts, and General Howe with the main part of the army is supposed to go up the Hudson to land in the area called West-Chester at a point corresponding, as much as possible, with the landing point of Lord Cornwallis on the other part of the coast. The two frigates which had sailed up the Hudson river, from which they were chased, yet stayed there long enough to reconnoiter the state of the defenses of this coast and make a satisfactory inventory of them.

And so there is the American army surrounded from everywhere and obliged to leave its fortifications to fight, that is, to be completely defeated. No one is examining whether General Howe would be exposing himself to being taken between two camps, for all the enemy forces are not shut up in the dead end of New York.

Such are, My Lord, the ideas upon which those persons who have not lost the habit of underestimating the enemy are nourishing themselves.

The first event can destroy all these conjectures, and we are awaiting any event with impatience. Other people assure everyone that the fate of New York must have been decided August 22nd. But I hardly pay attention anymore to these day to day conjectures and I will only believe well and duly witnessed facts. One certain one is that the American privateers have already in the course of this campaign gotten hold of 38 merchant ships returning to the West Indies. The last three, of whom we got word today, were taken by a privateer called the Revenge.[2] The price of insurance for ships coming from Jamaica is 20 Guineas p 0/0 and 18 for those coming back from the other Islands.

The lack of provisions which is starting to be felt in Canada forced General Carleton to free his prisoners, who numbered about 800. He also sent off the Indians who had sided with him, saying that he did not want to wage a war of that kind. The Government, which looks askance at this maneuver, feels that he took too much upon himself on this occasion. Provisions and munitions are being sent to Quebec without let-up. One hundred thousand pounds sterling have just been sent off to the same destination on a ship named the Union. Although it is armed with 16 cannons and eight swivel guns, they are not only insuring it, but giving 3 p 0/0 bonus.

A merchant of Bordeaux writes to his correspondent here that there are presently in that port 6 American vessels which arrived with cargoes of flour and which are preparing to arm in order to cruise at the entrance to the Channel.

. . . I had a trustworthy person ask the Comptroller of the Navy if there was any intention of impressing sailors soon, and he answered that there was no question of this. The secretary of the Admiralty, to whom the same question was put by one of the main ship constructors answered that no use would be made of this recourse for the American war and that before considering Pressing he had to construct several more vessels of 74 guns for the Admiralty.

MARQUIS DE GRIMALDI TO PRINCE MASSERANO[1]

[Extract] London, 4 October 1776

. . . Even admitting that Gen Howe might take possession of New York this year, he could not drive inland, and the only difference in the situation of the Regiments which were confined to Boston by the Rebels last winter is that they now have more ships to control the sea and receive the provisions sent to them here. . . .

It is said that Gens Carleton and Burgoyne have written from Canada that the Provincials have those Lakes covered with very well armed vessels; that those being readied to ferry the Royal Troops are few and not as good as the Provincial ones; that for this reason they must turn back and retreat to Quebec to obtain provisions. . . .

This trade is suffering from the many prizes the Americans have taken lately. It is said that an Irish Pirate chased seven English ships back to the shores of Spain and Portugal. More than 30 recently loaded English ships have fallen into Rebel hands. For this reason all merchant ships are arming and taking double crews, which makes it difficult to find seamen for war vessels. . . .

Letter from Exeter[1]

Exeter, (England), Oct. 5. The ship Bee, Captain Wallace, of Topsham, was, on his return from the Grenades, met, and taken by an American privateer. On Captain Wallace's being carried aboard the privateer; he told the Captain his was the last vessel an American should have taken. On being asked for what reason, he replied, that his owner had kept him at home for twelve months, because he would not lett his vessel as a transport against the Americans. The American, doubting the truth of this relation, said, he thought Wallace endeavoured to impose on him, and if he found it so, would punish him severly for it; but sending an officer on board the capture to interrogate the men separately on the subject, and having the Captain's story confirmed by their united accounts he credited it, and said, although the vessel was then his, he would return ship and cargo, only supplying himself with such things as he wanted, and taking 50 bags of Cocoa, 20½ casks and a pipe of Madeira wine, discharged Wallace, wishing him a good voyage.

AMERICAN THEATRE

SUMMARY

After the retreat from Long Island, Washington could not hold New York City, and the Continental Army fell back to defensive positions at Harlem Heights. Shortly after the withdrawal a devastating fire swept through the city.

Admiral Howe's domination of the waters surrounding Manhattan Island allowed British men-of-war to make probing missions in strength up the rivers, and to land troops at places of their choice. It soon became apparent that the enemy's intent was to cut off Washington from the rear thus preventing retreat northward or into New Jersey.

Farther to the north the contest for control of Lake Champlain reached a climax in the bitterly fought fleet battle off Valcour Island beginning on 11 October. The American squadron, commanded by General Benedict Arnold, was shattered. Crown Point was abandoned, and the remnants of Arnold's force reached Fort Ticonderoga. The vital lake route for the present was held by the British, but Sir Guy Carleton acknowledged that the "advanced season of the year" would cause him to retire to Canada for winter quarters. In defeat, Arnold had bought precious time which was to affect events at Saratoga the following year.

The new Continental Navy frigates were in various stages of construction, outfitting, or readying for sea. Seamen and cannon remained high on the shortage list. Privateering was on the upswing, and the lure of rich prize money contributed to the dearth of seamen for the Continental service. Great concern was felt for the two Continental frigates building at Poughkeepsie after British warships breached the obstructions in the Hudson River.

Some vessels of the original Hopkins' fleet were cruising, and the names of John Paul Jones and Nicholas Biddle were being heard more frequently as successful prize takers. On 10 October Congress fixed the seniority list for Continental Navy captains.

A quickening of State Navy activity was also much in evidence. And, in the West Indies, friction between the British and French intensified as the islands became increasingly significant depots for American supplies.

JAMES LYON TO THE MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL COURT[1]

[Extract] [Machias] Sept. [1] 1776.[2]

I earnestly request you to send one of your frigates, or two or three of your ablest privateers to take the ship that infests our coasts, & clear the way for fishermen & coasters; & then perhaps some generous persons may be disposed to send us bread & take some of our lumber. I ask for a small army to subdue Nova Scotia, or at least that some person or persons, may have leave to raise men, & go against that Province, at their own risque. I believe men enough might be found in this county, who would chearfully undertake it, without any assistance from Government. The people this way are so very anxious about this matter, that they would go in whale boats rather than not go. Provided they might call what they took their own in common with the good people of that Province. I confess, I am so avaricious, that I would go with the utmost chearfulness. I hope, however, I should have some nobler view, for I think it our duty to relieve our distressed brethren, & bestow upon them the same glorious priviledges, which we enjoy, if possible, & to deprive our enemies, especially those on this Continent, of their power to hurt us. With these views the Committee of this place were petitioned for leave to go against that Province. And had our request been granted, in all probability, that Country had now been intirely ours, & vast quantities of provision would have been cut off from our enemies. . . .

COMMODORE ESEK HOPKINS TO THE CONTINENTAL MARINE COMMITTEE [1]

Gentlemen Providence Septr 1st 1776

I stoppd at Newhaven on Wednesday, and found the Brig Hampden near ready for the Sea as Mr Lawrence inform'd me all but Men and Officers which she had none – Captn [Hoysteed] Hacker had not got there I left Orders for him when he came, to get as many men as would be sufficient and come with the Brig to New London – I came to New London thursday Morning, did not find Mr [Nathaniel] Shaw at home but learn'd that the Schooner and Bomb Brig were both Sold with all their Stores[2] – So that at present I do not know of any Vessel that can be had that will answer – How Mr Shaw came to Sell them and their Stores, or by whose Orders I can't tell – I likewise found the Cabot was gone out on a Cruise. She had been gone out about a Week, and have no knowledge how long she is to Cruise nor by what authority Captn [Elisha] Hinman could undertake to go out, as he had my Orders when I left New London for Philadelphia not to go to Sea without he receiv'd Orders from the Marine Committee or from me – [3]

I came here yesterday – have not yet seen Captn Saltonstall, but hear the Alfred is about five miles below with about forty Men including Officers onboard – having Spared Some to Captn Biddle, and a Number to Captn Whipple, who sail'd on a Cruise in four days after he got home, with One hundred & Seventy eight Men onboard

As soon as I get a little over the Fatigue of my Journey, shall set myself about Manning the Alfred – Should be glad to know when I get her ready whether I may Send her out under the Command of her Lieutenant Mr Jonathan Pitcher, who I believe to be a prudent Capable Man – Should be glad of your Sentiments to know whether you approve of Captn Hinman's Sailing with the Cabot, as I believe he has gone without Orders from any Person – Mr [George] House who you appointed Lieutt of the Brig Hampden is gone out in the Columbus – If you think proper to appoint Mr Walter Spooner a second Lieutenant, that he may act as first until House gets onboard, I believe it will be best for the Service – I am Gentlemn [&c.]

Lieutenant Colonel Robert Bisset to Governor Patrick Tonyn[1]

Sir

I this minute received your letter to Andrew Turnbul: This Information is very alarming especially with regard to Doctor Turnbul's people, a great many of whom woud certainly Join them [the Americans]; And the Plantations have neither arms nor ammunition, either to defend themselves or to endeavour to prevent their landing at Smyrnea –

They can only come in with boats as our Barr has not water enough for the Draught of any Private[er] which must be built sharp for sailing; So that I think our Plantations not in great danger, as we can get our Negroes out of the Way. – If such an event shoud happen most probably those that joined them of the Smyrnea settlements, woud endeavour to plunder our Plantations: – However I have great confidence in the badness of our bar, which I hope will deterr them from attempting anything here. I shall sett out immediatly for Smyrnea & will make the best disposition I can for the defence of the Place, by arming those we can trust & disarming the suspected, — I shall accquaint all the Plantations and put them on their Guard.

We are much obliged to Your Excellcy for this early information, which shows your attention to the good of the Province & the security of the Property of the settlers. I have the honour to be with Great respect [&c.]

Sir. Yours of the 29th of last Month came to hand this morning by the Govrs Express—I cannot help being a good deal alarmed at this bold stroke of the American Privateer, particularly as the Govrs letter informs me that she is come Southd and has Warner the Pilot on Board—If she should make her appearance of[f] this Barr I will and can easily secret our Negroes by sending them down the Indian River or back into the woods, but cannot say what might [be] the consequence regarding the white people, as there is a good number of them at present a little discontented, and I am fully perswaded would Join the Rebels immediately on their landing at Smyrnea—I therefore beg you and Mr Penman would make application to the Govr and Commanding Officer at St Augustine to reinforce the party here with a few more men if it is eight or ten only, for it is absolutely necessary, if it was for no other end but keep our own people a little more in awe—If this cannot be done I see plainly they will grow very insolent and unruly from the Georgians being so successful in their excursions in this Province.

St. George Tucker to Thomas Nelson[1]

[Extract] [Bermuda, September 1, 1776][2]

On the 22d of Augst a Brigantine belonging to Dr Campbell of Virga which had been detained by Lord Dunmore for several Months & was dismissed by him on his leaving Virginia (with a number of other Vessels) was taken in sight of this Island by Capt: Biddel [Nicholas Biddle] of the Continental Brigantine Andrew Doria. Lord Dunmore on dismissing the Brig having given her a Pass to avoid being taken by the British Vessels of War Capt: Biddle considered her as a prize—but not thinking the vessel worth sending to the Continent to be condemned took off a considerable Quantity of household furniture & other Effects which had been put on board by the Dr's Clerk when Norfolk was burnt (the Dr himself then being at Wmsburg) agreeably to the enclosed Account—the Saylors with a Wantoness which those people are generally apt to exercise on such Occasions destroyed many other Pieces of furniture such as Desks, Dressing Tables, Chests of Drawers &ca which are not inserted in this Account, and then dismissed the Brig —[3]

The Character which Dr Campbell supported in Virga and the Conduct which in the present disputes between Great Britain & America he has uniformly observed I flatter myself will justify me in observing that he has ever demonstrated himself to be the friend of that Country where he has resided for many Years with universal Esteem—The Convention of Virginia were sensible of this and acquitted him honourably of the charge which was brought agt him . . .

After this summary state of Facts, I presume you will be of Opinion that the Dr's Property was by no means to be considered as subject to continental Confiscation, since he cou'd be considered in no other point of view but as a friend to America. This Loss added to his former, in the Destruction of Norfolk, to the Amt of above £10,000 falls extreemly heavy on a Man whose Misfortunes were unmeritted as inevitable — Permit me then, sir, to sollicit your friendly Interposition in his Behalf in Congress in order to procure such a Compensation for his Loss as that honourable Body shall think reasonable upon Consideration of the Circumstances of his Case. . . .

has been the cause of many to leave their Estates to be Confiscated, & come over to this State, and will cause many more to leave their Homes unless they Can have some supplies, and Assistance. That if they could be supplied with Necessaries, such as provisions, and Ammunition with a small number to join their Bretheren there, they Could destroy their Enemies Forts, & Relieve their Bretheren by Permission from this Hon: Court for so doing, or in any other way &c.

Whereas by a Resolve past by the General Court the 29th April last, the Officers of Vessells in the Colony Sea service, were allowed to inlist Men out of the Companies raised for the defence of the Sea Coasts, and the Officers of the said Companies were thereby directed to permit any of their Men to Inlist into the Colony, & Continental Sea service only, and to Inlist others to supply vacancies occasion'd thereby as soon as may be.

And whereas such Liberty or allowance, which was the[re] given to the Officers of Vessells in the Colonial, & Continentall Service, has been found to be very detrimental; having weakened, & very much Exposed to the En[e]my, many of our Harbors, & Towns on the sea Coasts; And many of the Officers of the Sea Coast Companies, after much expence of Time, & Money to raise their Companies have had their Men taken from them, to their great loss & damage, & thereby been discourag'd from further recruiting; and some parts of the Sea Coasts may if this practice is allowed, be left destitute of all defence, & thereby become a Harbor for our Enemys, which would not only further distress our Trade, but involve us in many other difficulties. – Therefore –

Resolved, that the aforesaid Resolve of the 29th April, be & is hereby discontinued & made null, & Void.

In Council Resolved, that a Committee of suitable persons be appointed immediately to repair to the State of New Hampshire, & apply to the Government there, & if practicable, with the Loan of as many Cannon as can be spared from this State, to effect the fixing out the Continental Ship now under the direction of Mr [John] Langdon, and to take immediate measures that such number of Cannon, & other necessaries, as without distressing this State may be lent to the Continent, may be safely, & expeditiously transported to Portsmouth – This Ship to be fixed out for the purpose of Attacking the Milford, or other Ships of War distressing our Coasts – And in case said Ship can within any reasonable time be equipt for the Sea –

Newport Mercury, Monday, September 2, 1776

Newport, September 2.

Last Thursday arrived here, in about 18 days from St. Lucia, the brig Ludlow-Castle, Capt. Darling who informs that, a little before he sailed, there was a warm engagement in the West-Indies, between an American privateer, name unknown, and the British sloop of war, named Hawke, a well-known bird of prey; in which the Hawke was so much damaged, that she was obliged to make the best use of all her wings, to escape the American bird of justice;[1] which we must confess, has not had that agility of motion necessary for the detection and ample punishment of the enemies to this country: –Otherwise many a rascal who fled hither, to prevent being hanged in his own country, and some natives among us, would have had much longer necks before this day.

Memoirs of Major General William Heath[1]

[New York, September] 2d. They [the British] ran a ship past the city up the East River: she was several times struck by the shot of a 12 pounder, which was drawn to the river's bank. Major [John] Crane of the artillery was wounded in the foot, by a cannon shot from the ship. It was now a question whether to defend the city, or evacuate it, and occupy the strong grounds above. Every exertion had been made to render the works both numerous and strong; and immense labor and expense had been bestowed on them; and it was now determined that the city should be obstinately defended.

Governor Nicholas Cooke to Governor Jonathan Trumbull[1]

Sir, – Providence, September 3d, 1776.

In Addition to what I wrote your Honor of yesterday, I now inform you that there is at present no armed vessel belonging to the Continent in this State besides the Alfred, who hath not more than forty men, inclusive of officers. She, with the two Row Gallies, make the whole of the naval force in this State. I have communicated your letter to Commodore Hopkins, and find him perfectly disposed to co-operate with the Assembly in every measure in his power.

A sloop is now lading here with Continental pork, for New London. She will carry about one hundred barrels, and it is expected will sail to-morrow morning. I give you this information that you may, if necessary, make use of it for the forces on Long Island. I am, with every sentiment of respect, Sir [&c.]

VICE ADMIRAL RICHARD LORD HOWE TO PHILIP STEPHENS[1]

Number 7. Eagle off of Bedlow's Island, New York,
Sir September the 3d 1776.

Enclosed I transmit a Return of the Officers in different Stations which I have had Occasion to appoint for carrying on the King's Service in the Squadron under my Command.[2]

The Concerns of the Victualling, and Distribution of Naval Stores under proper Restriction, with other Matters respecting the Department of a Master Attendant, are so extensive, that I have been under a Necessity of having extraordinary Assistance in both these Branches. I send Copies of the two Appointments for their Lordships more particular Information therein; Hoping they will be pleased to authorize the Continuance of them, and also that of two Officers for Duty onboard the Eagle, in Addition to the established Number of Lieutenants, which are not sufficient for the current Duties of a public Ship; As well as the Nomination of an Assistant Agent requisite for the various Duties incident to the different Debarkations of the Hessian Corps, and landing and reshipping the Baggage and Stores of those inexperienced Troops.

I should have deemed it expedient to confirm the several Appointments made by Sir Peter Parker to the Vacancies that were occasioned by the Action at South Carolina, had my Powers been of sufficient Extent: But the Vacancy occasioned by the Resignation of Captain [Alexander] Scott[3] not corresponding with the Letter of my Instructions, I have left the Promotions consequent of that Resignation, as they stand in the enclosed Return from the Commodore, until their Lordships pleasure is signified concerning them. A great Firing was heard last night from the Town upon the Rose & the Boats, which were ordered to sail up the East River. One Shot passed through the Rose, and another beat off one of her anchors, without doing any other Damage. The Rebels fired two Pieces of Ordnance upon her to-day from a Battery opposite Bushwyck; and wounded two or three Men. The Boats got safe into Newtown Creek, and, as 'tis supposed, unperceived by the Enemy, through the favorable Darkness of the Night.

[Philadelphia] Tuesday, September 3, 1776

General Sullivan having reduced to writing the verbal message from Lord Howe, the same was laid before Congress, and read as follows:

The following is the purport of the message from Lord Howe to Congress, by General Sullivan:

That, though he could not at present Treat with Congress as such, yet he was very Desirous of having a Conference with some of The members, whom he would Consider for the present only as private Gentlemen, and meet them himself as such, at such place as they should appoint:

That he, in Conjunction with General Howe, had full powers to Compromise the Dispute between Great Britain and America, upon Terms advantageous to both; the obtaining of which Delayed him near Two months in England, and prevented his arrival at this place before the Declaration of Independency took place:

That he wished a Compact might be Settled at this time, when no Decisive Blow was struck, and neither party could say, that they were Compelled to enter into such agreement:

That, in Case Congress were Disposed to Treat, many things, which they had not as yet asked, might and ought to be granted Them; and That if, upon the Conference, They found any probable Ground of an Accommodation, The authority of Congress must be afterwards Acknowledged, otherwise The Compact would not be Compleat.

Proceedings of the Royal Council of Bermuda[1]

At a Council held at the Government House on Tuesday the 3d day of September 1776

Present

His Excellency the Governor. –

The Honoble George Forbes, Thomas Jones, Jonathan Burch, John Harvey } Esqrs

Edward Stiles, Henry Tucker, John Hinson } Esquires

The Board Considering the present Alarming Situation of the Island from a Scarcity of Provision thought advisable to Address His Excellency on the Occasion.–

The following Address being drawn up was read and approved of by the Board the same Signed by the President and by him presented to His Excellency as follows. Vizt—May it please Your Excellency.

We His Majesty's most dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Council of Bermuda beg leave to represent to Your Excellency the present Melancholly and truly calamitous Situation of this Island —

From your Excellencys long residence amongst us, you cannot but be intimately acquainted with the Nature of our Trade and our entire dependance upon the American Colonies for supplies of Provisions. That we cannot possibly exist without such supplies is a Fact well known to your Excellency, a Fact which cannot be controverted. It has however been often urged, that every necessary supply can be easily obtained from Great Britain and Ireland, but as your Excellency is no stranger to the utter Impracticability of such a plan we flatter ourselves it will be needless to suggest any of the numberless Arguments, which may be adduced to demonstrate, that every attempt of that sort must infallibly prove unsuccessful and abortive – Our Trade is now totally annihilated thro' the unhappy Contest between the Parent State and her Subjects in America. We have no Staple of any kind, by which we can procure the common Necessaries of Life, nor can we encourage the most distant Hopes of reeping any supplies from the Production of the Country (at all Times inconsiderable and trifling) but at present destroy'd by the long continued dry Weather. Under these deplorable Circumstances, where can we fly to for Refuge and Supportment. Where but to your Excellency the Representative of Our most Gracious Sovereign, whose Humanity is deservedly rank'd amongst his most distinguishing Characteristics. From what has been premis'd Should the late Act of Parliament which positively inhibits all Intercourse with the American Continent be literally and risidly [sic rigidly] adhered to, it is obvious that we must inevitably perish. We therefore most earnestly entreat your Excellency, that you wou'd be pleased to fall upon some Expedient; which may remove the Horrors the people at present but too justly entertain of an impending Famine. We are firmly persuaded that the Exigency of the Case and the peculiar Hardships we labour under will fully justify in His Majesty's Royal Breast every lenient Measure which Your Excellency may think proper to adopt for this desirable purpose, and therefore once more take the Liberty of repeating our Wishes that your Excellency wou'd be so good as to consider seriously the Distresses of the Inhabitants of this little Country and at the same time kindly grant them every Indulgence and Relief in Your Excellency's Power. –

By Order of the Board

September 3d 1776. – George Forbes, President –

His Excellency was pleased to Acquaint the Board that he would do every Service to the Country that [lay] in his power Consistent with his duty to His Majesty and supremacy of the British Empire, and Agreeable to His Instructions. – His Excellency then laid before the Council an Instruction together with a Form of Lycence he lately received from the Right Honorable Lord George Germain directed to be granted for fetching of provisions. –

The Board then Adjourned. –

Marquis de la Torre to José de Galvez[1]

No. 1207

Most Illustrious Sir:

On August 23 there sailed into this port the mail frigate Patagon, which left La Coruña at the beginning of July. Its Captain, Don Josef Teodoro Perez, told me that on the night of August 19th, about ten-thirty, he encountered a British warship near the point called Hicacos on the coast of this island, which, after inquiring if it was a Spanish mail ship, ordered it to haul sail and stay within reach of its guns until daybreak. Not wishing to obey this order, the Britisher let go a cannonade of five shots which did some damage to the sails. Ceding, therefore, to force, he shortened sail and sailed under convoy of the British warship heading for this port until daybreak. Having then unfurled the Royal standard and answered questions as to whether it had encountered any ships, he was allowed to continue on his course. This tale of the Captain is supported by the declarations I took down and the original of which were sent to the Marquis of Grimaldi, since the event verified affects a ship of the Mail Service.

The British frigate in question is undoubtedly the one called Diligence, commanded by Thomas Davees [Davey], which has been on a cruise off these coasts against shipping belonging to the Colonists of North America; the same that on the 14th and 15th of August anchored off the mouth of the harbor so as to take on water as informed in my letter of yesterday to Your Excellency.[2] [&c.]

VICE ADMIRAL CLARK GAYTON TO PHILIP STEPHENS[1]

Sir Antelope Jamaica September 3rd 1776

I have the pleasure to inform their Lordships, that since my letter of the 5th of last Month, Martial Law has been taken off, and that Peace & Tranquility is again restor'd to the Inhabitants, and beg leave to inclose for their information a Copy of a Letter I receiv'd from the Governor on that Subject.

I likewise beg leave to acquaint them that His Majestys Ship Winchelsea Captain [Nathaniel] Bateman arriv'd the 28th of August, by whom I receiv'd their directions to Careen & refit such of Lord Howe's Squadron as his Lordship might think proper to send, their order with the Kings Instructions respecting such Captures as should be made in consequence of the late Act for prohibiting all Trade & Commerce, with the Rebellious Colonies & your several letters of the 20th 22nd & 23rd of May, with their Inclosures, all which I shall pay due attention to, and beg leave to acquaint their Lordships, that I've always been very Circumspect in the orders which I have given my Cruizers, respecting the French Islands to prevent giving any umbrage to that Nation.

A few days before the arrival of the Winchelsea I receiv'd by the Pacquet their Lordships order for augmenting the Complements of His Majestys Ships under my Command and your several Letters of the 4th 5th & 7th June, acknowledging the receipt of mine of the 31 March last and beg leave to inform them that as the Atalanta was omitt'd in the List of Ships to have their Complements encreas'd, thinking it must have been some Mistake I have order'd Captain [Thomas] Lloyd to Compleat to 125 Men, which I hope will meet with their Lordships approbation.

I am happy they approve of the reasons which I have assign'd for purchasing the Lady Keith Schooner (which I have consider'd; as one of the Four, since order'd to be purchas'd) and am extreemly oblig'd to their Lordships for complying with my request in confirming the order which I gave Mr Frans L'Montais to be Lieutenant of her

Having no Money Imprest against me, on my leaving England for Contingent Charges, was the reason of my ordering the Naval Storekeeper to pay the Attorneys Bill, for defending the several Actions brought against me for the Detention of the American Vessels & their Crews but will draw on the Navy Board for Five Hundred pounds Sterling to defray those Expences in future and shall account for the same in my Contingent Account agreeable to their Lordships directions, which I hope they will approve.

I likewise beg leave to acquaint them; that by the Addition of my Squadron and those expected from North America to Careen & refit, I have found it necessary for the forwarding the Service to purchase a Watering Sloop, as it [is] attend'd with many ill conveniences and bad consequences, watering with the Ships Boats, particularly to the small Arm'd Vessels & twenty Gun Ships, the Watering Place being near Ten Miles from Port Royal which Subjects the People, to be exposed to the extreem heat of the Sun in the Day, or to the Dews in the Night, both of which I am confident are very prejudicial to the Health of the Seamen, I have therefore order'd the Naval Storekeeper to purchase one of the Prize Sloops for £130 Curry (equal to £93 Stg) for this Service which I hope their Lordships will approve

The Inclos'd Account of Sir Peter Parkers attack on Chas Town I got from the Master of a Sloop, who was present, at the Action, which I am to much afraid may be depend'd on, as he is the Man, who escap'd with the Kings Powder from [New] Providence & has always been firmly attach'd to Government

With regard to the Disposition of His Majestys Ships & Vessels under my Command, I beg leave to inform their Lordships that the Antelope, Winchelsea & Atalanta are at Port Royal, the Winchelsea I shall send to Cruize after the Americans, as soon as she has got a new Bowspreet, having Sprung her old one upon the Passage out, the Atalanta I shall send to Convoy the Pacquet through the Windward Passage, then to Cruize to intercept the North Americans and on her return shall Careen & send her to Pensacola; to relieve the Diligence, who is exceeding bad.

The Squirrel & Porcupine Schooner are Sail'd on a Cruize for the Windward Passage to Intercept some North American Privateers which I had receiv'd information of, and to remain on that Service til the Middle of October — The Racehorse; I expect in a few days from the North Side, where she has been Station'd for some time past, in consequence of the late intend'd Insurrection, on her arrival I shall order her to Compleat her Provisions & send her to Sea, the Badger is to remain Fourteen days longer, & if every thing then remains quiet to return to Port Royal — The Boreas has been spoke with on the Coast of America, so I hope she'll soon Join me again & the Maidstone sailed with the Convoy in July & is to return to Jamaica, with all possible dispatch on leaving them I am, with great respect Sir [&c.]

VICE ADMIRAL CLARK GAYTON TO PHILIP STEPHENS[1]

Sir Antelope Jamaica September 3rd 1776

I beg leave to lay before their Lordships the Situation, we are in for want of Stores particularly Masts and Bowspreets, those that are in Store being entirely decay'd. the Squirrel after her late Cruize; came in with her Fore Mast Sprung & before she could get another, was oblig'd to take out three Sticks, two of which in Working prov'd to be decay'd, the Winchelsea has likewise had the Misfortune to spring her Bowspreet, & her People has been Employ'd for this three days past, overhauling the Stores; for a Stick to make a new one, but as yet cannot meet with any, but what are decay'd to the very Heart –

I have the same Complaint of the Cordage from the Captains of His Majestys Ships under my Command who all assure me, tis dry Rotten, before tis Issu'd, indeed I have one instance of it myself, in regard to some New Careening Gear which I order'd to be fitt'd, and the first Ship that hove down by it (which was the Antelope) as soon as she came Keel out, Four of the Outrigger Pendants, out of the Five; gave way all together, but happily it was attend'd with no bad consequences

As their Lordships inform me I am to expect some of Lord Howes Squadron to Careen & Refit, I must beg they will be pleas'd to direct the Navy Board to send a supply of Stores, particularly Masts & Bowspreets, there not being a Sufficiency of those Stores for my own Squadron I am with great Respect Sir [&c.]

Clark Gayton

[Endorsed] 3 Jany [1777] send a Copy hereof to the Navy Board for their information and recommend to them to cause supplies of Stores to be sent out from time to time, that the ships on the station may be in constant readiness for Service and to be particularly carefull that the Stores they do send are of good Quality, & fit for the use to which they are applicable.

Thomas Cushing to John Hancock[1]

Dear sir Boston September the 4. 1776

Mr William Bant Informed me that you directed him to pay into my hands such monies as he had from time to time occasion to remit to Philadelphia upon your Account, and to take Bills for the same upon yourself, he has accordingly paid me One Thousand Dollars for which have given him a Bill, which I hope will be Agreable: I forgot to mention in my last that Capt Manly sett out for Philadelphia on the 31st Ultimo, he is quite tired of waiting for the Guns & goes either to get discharged from the service or to bring the Guns with him, he goes also with a view, I suppose, of prosecuting an Appeal to Congress with respect to the determination of the Maritime Court of New hampshire relative to a Vessell & Cargo he took some time since & carried in there[2] – I wish he may succeed with respect to procuring the Guns—The Vessells might have cleared themselves by this time if they had been furnished with Guns but the want of them retards every thing, It will be impossible to fix off & Man the Ships till they are obtained— I remain with great respect [&c.]

Petition of Thomas Cragg to the Massachusetts Council[1]

State of the Massachusetts Bay } To the Honble the General Court of the said State –

The Petition of Thomas Cragg humbly Shews—that your Petitioner being part owner of the Ship Isaac & her Cargo was on a Voyage in said Ship from the Island of Tortola bound to Liverpool in England, to visit his Family & attend to his private concerns, that in prosecuting said Voyage he was taken & brought into this State[2]—this unexpected Event has thrown your Petitioner into the most distressed & pitiable Circumstances—a principal part of his Fortune is taken out of his hands, and what remains, must suffer inevitable ruin from his absence in a short time—he has a Wife, Children & a large Family who cannot long subsist without his support, & himself tho' unused to want the Conveniencies of Life, must soon experience the wretchedness of extream poverty—your Petitioner begs leave to declare that he has never taken an active part in the unhappy Controvery between Great Britain & America, & from his Age & standing in Life, it necessarily follows that he never will; he therefore humbly prays your Honors to take his unhappy case into your consideration and grant him & one Servant Liberty to take passage for some part of England in the Ship owned by Mr William Ross and by your Honors permission bound for some part of England,[3] or grant him such other relief as your Honors well known Wisdom and Humanity may point out, and your Petitioner as in duty bound shall ever pray.

LORD DUNMORE TO LORD GEORGE GERMAIN[1]

My Lord September 4th 1776. –

Since my Arrival here I have received your Lordships Letter of the 21st of May and am sorry to find that the Duke of Cumberland Packet Boat, with the dispatches were lost, tho' I am afraid your Lordship would have found but little information that would have been agreeable to you, one reason why I am sorry they did not get safe is, that mine contained originals of Intercepted Letters that would have gone far to have Warranted the securing the bearers of them, those were chiefly French, which it was not in my power from the shortness of the time from their being intercepted and the Sailing of the Packet to have Copied; of the others I have already sent you Duplicates, and now Triplicates.

It becomes Necessary now that I should give your Lordship my reasons for being here, they are few, but I hope your Lordship will think them conclusive; first the impracticability of Watring, our Numbers being reduced to one hundred and eight Men capable of doing duty, and those decreasing every day. The last time we were on Shore (as your Lordship will have seen by No 4) we were opposed by above three times our Number, and that we were sure to meet with wherever we went. Secondly our sickly State, yet I cannot say our Sick List increased much in Numbers, as there were as many died, almost as there were added to it, in short, there was not a Ship in the fleet that did not throw one, two, three or more dead over board every Night, the Roebuck I will venture to say is as well regulated, and as clean a Ship as any in the Navy, had Seventy five on her Sick list, and so in proportion had every other Ship; Captn Hamond and myself, finding it absolutely requisite to go to Sea immediately, as the only chance of recovering the sick, and saving those that were well; And being at Sea, and knowing this to be the place of rendezvous, for both Fleet and Army, We both thought it best to run in here; Where we would have an opportunity of giving the General and Admiral every information that came within our knowledge, relative to the State of the Southern Colonies, and our own Situation, and at the same time to procure some Aid; tho' both General and Admiral approve very much of our conduct, yet they seem very unwilling to part with any of their force at present, indeed it is hardly to be wished, till the fate of New York is determined, when I hope, if they are able to spare us any assistance they will; Sure I am returning to Virginia without, can Answer no good end to His Majesty's Service, but on the contrary would be giving fresh vigour, and Spirits to the Rebels, who would have it in their power to drive us from every spot whence we might endeavour to Land for Water, and if we run up any of the Rivers for Water they are thence so Narrow, that the Rebels may Annoy a Ship from either side with Cannon with impunity.

I have offered my services here in the mean time to General Howe, and shall be happy if I can be of use.

I have now only to Congratulate your Lordship on the Success of His Majesty's Arms on the 26th Ultimo: I was with the Highlanders and Hessians the whole day, and it is with the utmost pleasure I can assure your Lordship that the Ardour of both these Corps on that day must have exceeded His Majesty's most sanguine wish, and I am well convinced from every thing I have heard, that the fervour of the rest of the Army was in no ways inferior to those I have just now mentioned, but of which I was not an Eye Witness. I am My Lord [&c.]

Diary of Frederick Mackenzie [1]

[Long Island] 4th Sept 1776 The Rebels fired a good deal at the Rose, yesterday and this day, but as she lies under Blackwell's Island, in such a manner that her Hull is not seen by their batteries, they can do her no great damage with Cannon Shot. This day they threw several Shells over the Island at her, but without effect. She lies however in a dangerous situation.

Most of the Ships of War and Transports came up yesterday from Gravesend Bay and Staten Island, and anchored between Red-hook and Governor's Island.

The Niger and Brune Frigates and the Halifax armed Brig, are in the Sound, between Flushing and Whitestone.

On Board the [General] Putnam, Cranbery Inlet the 4th of Sept 1776

Sir: I am sorry to inform you that there is a great disturbance in the Vessel which made its appearance During my absence, and Capt [Thomas] Cregier went away without informing me of it. They I understand had told him they were determined not to sail under his Command, and requested that they might be permitted to Petition the Congress for a Discharge from the Vessel, on acct of his bad conduct which he did not grant. On my requesting to way the anchor in order to go out, they one and all aquainted me it was their Determined Resolution never to act in the Schooner while he had the Command of her, upon which I have thought fit to grant them the liberty to Petition and send it by the bearer of this Letter, as I imagine that the Capt will not inform you of these Disturbances, have thought to acquaint you in this manner and as he is not Expected back under Eight or ten Days should be glad you would write me as soon as possible and let me know in what manner you think it most prudent for me to act. Your Compliance will much oblige your Humble Servt

Crew of the Schooner General Putnam to the New York Convention[1]

[Cranberry Inlet, September 4, 1776][2]

To the Honble the Congress of New York assembled at the White Plains in the State of New York

The humble petition of us the Subscribers sheweth that we have been four Months in the service of the American States on board the Schooner Genl Putnam, during which time we have not been to sea but 11 Days all the rest of the Time we have spent inactively at the Head of Inlets, five or six Miles from the Mouths thereof from whence at any Emergency we could not put out without great Difficulty, and often not at all. That we have sundry Times Laid a week sometimes longer in an Inlet, and in one we have laid at Anchor four or five Miles from the mouth a full Month without ever attempting to go out or scarcely offering to send any Person to look out. that numbers of vessels have pass'd and repass'd without our endeavouring to speak them, notwithstanding it was the opinion of the officers we had several opportunities verry favourable. that with our Commander Thomas Cregier on board we have not been out of this Inlet in seven weeks.

That our sd Commander hath several Times insulted the officers when they have candidly advised him and gave them to understand that their business was only to answer a question when ask'd, and not attempt giving advice. that in correcting People for slight or no offences, he hath used unlawfull weapons, once presenting a Pistol to the breast of one Burns, for only requesting to know what his stated allowance was, and swearing by God he would blow a Ball through him, at another time with a large hickory club striking one Bell on the head and much wounding him for what in our opinion scarcely appear'd a crime. that in no one thing has he complied with the resolves of the Congress, His whole conduct being one series of Folly, Vice and Inconsistencies, setting the most scandalous Examples to the People, swearing, Lying and frequenting the company of the most contemptible of women, Presenting the Private Property of others to them, also at sundry Times giving the Ships and Cabben stores away. we are sorry to have occasion to Lay those charges against our Commander, but black as they are they can be Proved, by the Journals of the officers, and the Evidence of the most respectable persons in these Parts.

That by this Means he hath rendered himself Despicable to every man on board, has greatly dissatisfied every friend of the cause, and become the derision of its foes.

That we cannot with honor serve any longer under the Comand of the said Thomas Cregier. that in our sincere oppinion (with him as our Commander) we have not done the least service to our Country, and the season of the year being so far advanced, we humbly conceive the vessel unfit to be continued in the service, she being weakened and consequently would endanger our Lives in a gale of wind, besides she leaks so that not a man in the Hold can Lay dry in the Cabbins, and at the same time that we solemnly declare our ardent desire to Exert our utmost abilities in Defence of our Distress'd Country, in any station where there is a probability of doing it; and profess ourselves fully satisfied with the conduct of our Lieutenant, Mr. [Thomas] Quigley, and the officers in general, and though we confess it would be most agreeable to have a Discharge from this vessel, yet if your Honourable House think proper to continue us therein (as long as the season will admit) under the command of Mr. Quigley or any other Person you shall appoint, except the said Thomas Cregier, we shall cheerfully comply — for we beg leave to assure you that we glory in yealding obedience to your commands — but humbly request for the Honor & Interest of our Country and ourselves that the said Thomas Cregier may be Cashiered, and your Petitioners as in duty bound shall every pray

JOHN ADAMS TO DR. SAMUEL COOPER[1]

[Extract] Philadelphia Sept. 4. 1776

our Generals, I fear have made a Mistake in Retreating from long Island. I fear they will retreat from the City of New York next. — These are disagreeable Events. — I dont like these Measures. — I wish there was more firmness — But let not these Things discourage, — if [illegible] get Possession of New York, long Island, and Staten Island — these are more Territory than their whole Army can defend. – this Year. — They must keep their Force together. The instant they divide it they are ruined. – They cannot march into the Country, for before they get Ten Miles into the Country they are surrounded or their Retreat cutt off. – They cannot go up the North River to any purpose – because, a few Months, will make Ice in it in which their Vessells cannot live. – They must keep the most of their Ships in the Harbour of New York to defend their Army. – I sometimes think, that Providence, against our own opinions and Inclinations has provided better for Us in this Instance than our own Wisdom would have done– that the Enemies Fleet and Army were kept from long Island, they must and would have made an Effort elsewhere for Winter Quarters at Staten Island they could not have wintered. – they must therefore have wintered at Boston, Rhode Island, or have gone to the Southward to Virginia, one of the Carolinas or Georgia, and either of these Cases would, perhaps have been worse, for Us. – The Panick, which is Spread upon the occasion is weak and unmanly – it excites my Shame, and Indignation. But it is moving off. – If our whole Army had been cutt to Pieces it would have been shamefull to have been so intimidated, as some are or pretend to be. – Congress I hope will stand firm. –

[Extract] [Philadelphia] Wednesday Septr. 4. 1776

. . . I am obliged to General [Benjamin] Lincoln for his Information, concerning the Fortifications, which I hope will be effectually attended to, as I am not clear, that Boston is yet Secure from Invasion.

I hope, the Disasters at Long Island, and New York will not dispirit our People. The Ways of Providence are inscrutable. I have strong suspicions that these Disasters have saved Boston from another Invasion, which I think would have been attempted by the two gratefull Brothers, with their whole Fleet and Army, if they had not obtained Long Island.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES TO THE CONTINENTAL MARINE COMMITTEE [1]

Gentleman

I had the honour of writing to you the 27 Augt pr the Brigantine Brittania which I sent in under the Care of Lt Wm Grinnell Since that I have been to the Southward near the parallel of Bermuda & bro't too four Sail of French Spanish & Danish Ships homeward Bound but without gaining any usefull Information. — on the first Currt. I fell in with a Fleet of five Sail — one of them being very large it was the Genl opinion on board here that she was either an Old Indiaman outward bound with Stores or a Jamaica three Decker bound homeward we found her to be an English Frigate mountg twenty Six Guns upon one Deck She Sailed fast & pursued us by the Wind till after four hours Chace the Sea running very Cross She got within Musquet Shot of[f] our Lee Quarter — as they had continued firing at us from the first without Shewing Colours I now Ordered ours to be hoisted & began to fire at them Upon this they also hoisted American Colours and fired Guns to Leeward — but the bait would not take for having every thing prepared I bore away before the Wind & set all our Light Sail at Once so that before her Sails could be trimmed & Steering Sails set I was almost out of reach of Grape & soon after out of reach of Cannon Shot. — Our "Hairs breadth Scape" & the Saucy manner of making it must have mortified him not a little had he forseen this motion & been prepared to Counteract it he might have fired Several Broad Sides of Double Headed & Grape Shot which would have done us very material Damage but he was a bad marksman & tho' within Pistol Shot did not touch the Providence with one of the many Shot which he fir'd.

I met with no other Adventure till last night when I took the Bermuda built Brigantine Sea-Nymph bound from Barbadoes for London with a Cargoe of two hundred & twenty seven Hogshead's & Eight barrels of Rum, Five Hogsheads two Tierces & ten barrels of Sugar Six bags Ginger fourteen Casks of oil & Twelve Pipes best particular London Market Madeira Wine—

The Brig is new & Sails very fast so that she is a pretty good prize. — By the Master of the Brig & a Passenger I hear that the A Doria was off Bermuda a few days Since also that Capt Weeks [Wickes] had an Action with an English Sloop of War off Martinico & that our Side was victorious & drove the Englishman into Martinico —

I am now convinced that I am too late in the Season I will however try my utmost 'tis not impossible that I may yet fall in with another prize I did not expect to have found a Frigate Convoying two Ships a Brig & a Sloop if the Store Ships come out all under Convoy my hopes of Success from that Quarter must fall Short. – I have the honor to be with much Esteem & Respect Gentlemen [&c.]

Captain John Paul Jones to Robert Morris[1]

Honoured Sir Providence at Sea 4th Septr 1776.

I herewith inclose for your inspection all the letters and Papers which I found in the Brigantine Sea Nymph – for the Particulars of my Cruise hitherto I must beg leave to refer You to the within Open letter to the Marine Board which please to lay before them – I purpose to Stand to the Southward in hopes of falling in with some Ships which I understand are now on their Passage from Barbados – but at this late Season my Success is very Uncertain – I will, however, Ply about in this Meridian as long as I think I have any chance and if I fail at last I can run to the Northward and try for better Success among the Fishermen which may Answer no bad Purpose by increasing the Number of our Seamen. – however my cruise may terminate I forget not the Singular Obligation I owe to Mr Morris who Promoted it for my honour and Advantage & I esteem the Honour done me by his accepting my Correspondence as the greatest favour I could have Aspired to – I conclude that Mr [Joseph] Hewes hath Acquainted you with a very great Misfortune which befel me Some Years ago and which brought me into No America – I am under no concern however that this or any Past Circumstance of my life will Sink me in your Opinion Since human Wisdom cannot Secure us from Accidents it is the greatest effort of Reason to bear them Well. – I will from time to time carefully communicate to you every intelligence in my Power – and "As the regulations of the Navy," he says, "are of the Utmost Consequence You will not think it Presumption if with the Utmost diffidence I Venture to communicate to you Such hints as in my Judgement will Promote it's Honour and Good government. — I could heartily wish that every Commiss[ioned] Officer were to be Previously examined, — for, to my certain knowledge, there are Persons who have Already except into Commission without Abilities or fit Qualification: I am myself far from deserving to be excused. — from my experience in Ours as well as from my former intimacy with many Officers of Note in the British Navy, I am convinced that the Parity of Rank between Sea & land or Marine Officers, is of more consequence to the harmony of the Service, than hath generally been imagined. — in the British Establishment — an Admiral ranks with a Genl a Vice Admiral with a Lieut Genl a Rear Admiral with a Major Genl a Commodore with a Brigadier Genl — a Captain with a Colonel, a master & Commander with a Lieut Col[o]nel — a Lieut. Commanding with a Major, and a Lieutenant in the Navy Ranks with a Captain of Horse, Foot or Marines. — I propose not our Enemies as an Example for our Genl imitation — Yet as their Navy is the best regulated of any in the World, we must in Some degree imitate them and Aim at such further improvement as may one day make ours Vie with and Exceed theirs. — Were this Regulation to take Place in our Navy it would Prevent numberless disputes and deuelings with otherwise will be Unavoidable." — besides Sir, you know very well that Marine Officers being Utterly Unacquainted with Maritime Affairs — are in those Cases unfit Persons to Preside at or Compose half the number of a Court Martial. — I beg Pardon for the liberty — I thought that Such hints might escape Your Memory in the Multiplicity of Business. — I have Always Understood that the Sentince of a Court Martial when Confirmed by a Commander in Chief was definitive and Admitted of no Appeal — to Prove this I must again recur to English authority in the Case of Lord Geo. G. Sackville who for disobeying the Orders of Prince Ferdinand at the Battle of Mindan was by a Court Martial held at the Horse Guards Rendered incapable of Serving Afterwards in any Military Capacity — Altho' his great Abilities were then well known and are Generally acknowledged at this day — I am led into this Subject by hearing with Astonishment the Application and Complaint of the late Captn [John] Hazard to the Marine Board after he had been found "Unworthy of Bearing his Commission in the Navy" by the Undivided Voice of a Court Martial where I had the honour to Sit as a Member.

If he was then Unworthy of bearing his Commission I cannot see what new Merit he can have acquired — and even if he had merit it would not be Sound Policy to reverse the Sentence — it would make Officers Stand less in Awe and attend less Punctually to their duty — and it is not Impossible that it might Induce future Court Martials in some Cases to inflict Personal Punishment from whence there is no Appeal.

There was a Mistake made in the date of my Commission which Unless you Stand my Friend will make a material difference when the Navy Rank is Settled — I took Command here the Tenth day of May as appears the Order and Appointment of the Commr in Chief on the Back of my Commission as Eldest Lieutenant of the Fleet. and my Commission as Captain is not dated 'till the Eight day of August — which you know is not fair as it would Subject me to be Superseded by Captain Robeson [Isaiah Robinson] who was at first my Junior Officer by Six — Perhaps it might Subject me to be Superseded by Others. — If I have deserved so ill as to be Superseded I am Unworthy of bearing my Commission. — I esteem it a greater disgrace and Severer Punishment than to be fairly broke and dismiss'd the Service. — I have ordered Mr [William] Hopkins the Prize Master to deliver You a Turtle which Please to Accept — I have the Honour to be with Grateful Esteem and much respect [&c.]

Minutes of the Royal Council of West Florida[1]

[Extract]

At a Council, held at His Excellency the Governor's House in Pensacola the 4th September 1776.

His Excellency Acquainted the Board that he had called them together in Consequence of different Intelligences Communicated to him by the Superintendant of Indian Affairs respecting the designs of the Rebels to attack this Colony and at this Critical Situation of Affairs he wished to have all the assistance and advice of His Majestys Servants. . . .

It also appearing to the Board that there is reason to apprehend the Rebels have designs against Mobile — They therefore recommend that the Engineer form an Estimate of the Expence Necessary to be incurred by temporary repairs to secure that Post in case of any Attack upon it and Report the same as soon as he can to this Board.

His Excellency also laid before the Board a Letter which [he] had received from Lieut Charles Cobb commanding His Majesty's Armed Sloop [West] Florida in this Harbour. . .[2]

Upon which it was recommended by the Board that His Excellency do request Lieut Cobb at this Critical Juncture of Affairs to give Orders that the West Florida armed Sloop (sent down with an intent to be of Service to the Province) may remain here untill the Arrival of Capt Davey in the Diligence – who is hourly expected or some other of His Majestys Ships —

And they farther recommend that His Excellency also apply to Lieut Cobb to give the proper Orders that the West Florida afford what assistance she can to the works to be carried on for the Security and defence of this place and more particularly in bringing up a quantity of timber now laying at the Red Cliffs Rose Island and Tartar point which will be wanted for that purpose

The Board also think it their indispensible duty to mention that as His Excellency is acquainted by a Letter from Lord George Germain – that His Majesty has thought fit to give orders to Sir Basil Keith and Admiral Gayton for the protection and Security of this Province in any Event which may happen in the present State of Rebellion in North America –

They therefore think it highly proper to recommend that His Excellency the Governor do desire Lieut Cobb to hold himself in readiness immediately to proceed to Jamaica in the Armed Sloop [West] Florida with dispatches from His Excellency to Sir Basil Keith and rear Admiral Gayton representing the alarming Situation we are at present in – and require that all the assistance which they can afford us may be immediately sent down for the Relief and protection of this Province – And then the Board were adjourned till tomorrow morning –

Sir – Boston 5th Sepr 1776

. . . You may Rely on your directions to Capt [Stephen] Cleveland being most punctually Complied with in every respect[2] . . .

I beg leave to hint that I last week wrote your worthy president relative to a matter wch as it concerns his private interest its probable he may be backward in mentiong to the Comee vizt the Agent for New hampshire stops all Continental prizes that occasionally goes into their harbour mouth for a nights Anchorage, and Orders them up to town there to be sold, their harbour is so Situated that as the Autumn Approaches, its not probable we may have another prize here the whole season and its a notorious fact, that vessells nor Cargoss, will sell for more than half they would sell for here —

Sails for London, from Halifax, in the Princess Royal Jamaicaman, Robert Hollowell, Nat Mills, Printer, Margarett Draper and Family; George Deblois, Sam Rogers, Sam Hughes, John Atkinson, the Miss Cummings's; and Justice Cutler of New-Hampshire.

Captain [Daniel] Waters, in the Lee Vessel of War, has retaken a Sloop bound for Halifax, which was lately taken off this Harbour, by the Milford Frigate, and sent her safely into Port.[1]

Taken up by the Company stationed at Plimouth for the Defence of the Sea Coast, the Hull of the Sloop called the Smilling Molley, with her Name wrote on her Stern, with white Paint, is almost 90 Tons burthen, appears to be about two Years old, was scuttled and drifting along Shore when found, the 24th of August current, about 5 Miles to the Northward of the Light House on the Gurnet, is painted with green Hants, and green Stern, had her Mast carried away by the Deck, and quite empty, not a Chest or Paper on board, is now at the Wharf in Plimouth. Any Person claiming Property, are desired to apply to Captains William Weston and Jesse Harlow, at Plymouth, being the Commanders of the Company above-named.

GOVERNOR JONATHAN TRUMBULL TO GOVERNOR NICHOLAS COOKE[1]

Sir, — Lebanon, Sept. 5th, 1776.

. . . We have also determined to equip what naval force we have with all possible dispatch. I have certain intelligence that our forces are withdrawn from Long Island and Governor's Island, and that the two Continental companies, stationed on the east end of Long Island, are come over to the main, and that the militia on Long Island are dispersed. We are extremely desirous to co-operate with your State in every proper measure for our mutual defence, as there seems to be a threatening appearance that the enemy will endeavour to land on the eastward of New York, in order to cut off the communication and prevent supplies to our army. You will undoubtedly judge it expedient to send the regiment you have already raised, with such other force as you shall judge proper, to unite with us in this important measure, as also to augment and send your naval force for that important purpose, and to clear the Sound if possible. The matter undoubtedly demands the utmost attention and dispatch, as all seems to lie at stake. Don't doubt of your most vigorous exertions. I have advised General Washington and the Provincial Congress of the Massachusetts, of the measures we have taken. Would recommend it to you to consult Commodore Hopkins upon the expediency of attempting to dislodge the enemy's ships from the Sound, how far it is probable it might be done; also, whether the ships with you cannot be manned out of the forces you may raise, or is it not probable for the present emergency it may be done from the army. You will please to return an early answer to these matters.

[Extract] Tyonderoga 5th September 1776.

. . . I am attentive to what you mention with Regard to an Officer being appointed to the Command of the Royal Savage, and have, accordingly, fixed my Eye upon Colonel [Edward] Wigglesworth, who has, upon my recommending it to him, most readily undertaken to serve as the Third Officer on Board the Fleet, yourself first, and Genl [David] Waterbury, Second. He will sail tomorrow Morning in the Gondola, now here. The Colonel is a good Seaman, appears to be much of a Gentleman. and has, as far as I can learn, an unimpeached good Character.

Lieutenant [James] Calderwood delivers you this Letter, and carries down with him the Seventy Men you have demanded. I understand Two Hundred Seamen are inlisted at New-York for this Service. They shall be put on Board the Row Gallies, the Moment they arrive. The first Row Galley will be to-day, the other Two, General Waterbury assures me, will be launched this Week. No Time shall be lost in Rigging them, and dispatching them to the Fleet. As soon as you get the Reinforcement I now send you, you will not, perhaps, think it necessary to detain Colonel [Thomas] Hartley's Detachment. He seems exceedingly anxious for them to return, as he hopes to engage his whole Regiment for another Year.

I send you by the Bearer, Lieutenant Calderwood, the Draught of the Lake as you desire. . . .

When General Waterbury and Colonel Wigglesworth join the Fleet, you will be able to dispose it in three Divisions; yourself in the Centre, General Waterbury on the Right, and Colonel Wigglesworth on the left. This Disposition will teach the Captains of the Vessels to know their Commanding Officers, and prevent any Confusion or dispute, about Command, in Case an unlucky Shot, or other Accident should take off the General.

As you have seen, and examined every Part of the Lake in your Way down, I should be glad to know your Opinion, what is the properest, and most defensible Station for the Fleet to take. Gales of Wind will probably be heavy about the Equinox. You are too good a Seaman not to take a secure Place for Anchorage against that Season. I am very much pleased to find the Gondolas are such good Sea Boats.

I fancy you will think it immediately necessary you should send hither your most experienced Pilot, to conduct the Row-Gallies with Safety, to the Fleet. Let him have your positive, and particular Instructions, how You think proper he should proceed. It will be proper you should communicate the Orders you, from Time to Time, receive, to General Waterbury and Colonel Wigglesworth, that they may know how to act upon any Emergency.

AMBROSE SERLE TO LORD DARTMOUTH[1]

My Lord,

In my last Letter I acquainted Your Lordship with the safe Arrival of the Hessians and Guards, and of the Troops under General Clinton from the South. By all together, on Sea and Land, we have a very respectable Force; and the Object of this Letter is to inform Your Lordship, how it has been employed. But I will take the Liberty to mention a few Circumstances, previous to the important Events, which are the main Points of Attention, and to which all the rest must be ultimately drawn.

The Hessian General and other Commanders have been treated with the greatest Deference, which (as might be expected with Germans) has made a pleasing Impression upon their Temper and Conduct, and inclined them as heartily in the Cause as the warmest among us could desire. On the other hand, the injudicious Abuse and Menaces of the Rebels, and the Hope of Plunder (for I hear all the Hessian common Soldiers have a Notion of making their Fortunes), have stimulated them to such a Degree, as by no means inclines them to shew Tenderness and Mercy. They are very expert in foraging, and have made great Use of their Time. The Company & example of the British Troops has hitherto prevented all excessive Cruelties.

On the 18th of August in the Morning, the Wind and Tide being fair, the two Ships (Phoenix and Rose) came down the River again in Defiance of the Rebel Batteries, and, though pelted all the Way, received no other Damage than by one Ball which struck the Rose and drove a Splinter into a Man's Leg. Such Artillerists were the Rebels, that all the rest of their Discharges, which were above an hundred, scarce came near either the Ships or their Tenders. A Captain of Engineers from the Town, with his Servant, attempting to get onboard the Ships, was overset in his Boat by the rapid Course of the Rose and unhappily drowned: the Servant was saved. The Rebels had attacked and sent up Fire-Ships to burn them, but to no purpose. — Our People destroyed about 200 of them in the Attempt, and towed off the Fire Ships to consume at Leisure, with the Loss only of a small Tender and of two Men.

Early in the Morning of the 22d of August, the English Troops, the Highlanders, and Preston's Light Horse, were conveyed over to Long Island without the least Opposition from the Rebels. — They immediately penetrated into the Country full 10 Miles, the Rebel Forces hastily retiring, and burning all the Ricks of Hay, Corn, &c. as they went. They were pressed upon too suddenly, however, to drive off the Cattle or to do so much Mischief, as the poor People, who are mostly well disposed, informed us they had intended. On the 25th following, the main Body of the Hessians were carried over likewise, and joined the Army, which, upon this Junction, amounted to near 20,000 Men. Some Troops were necessary to be left upon Staten Island, to prevent Incursions from the Jerseys.

On the 27th the important Scene was opened. As Your Lordship will have an Account of the Action in the public Dispatches, I will only relate what passed under my own Observation at a little Distance from the Shore. I saw much of the Battle, which from Beginning to End was almost a running Fight. The Rebels, confident in Numbers, were advanced in an open Field, but on very advantageous Ground, without their Lines. Nothing could exceed the Art of General Howe in the Disposition and Conduct of his Attack. The Army was marshalled into three Divisions. One Column marched under General [James] Grant at a set Time to a particular Spot on the Coast, near to the main Body of the Rebels: The Second under General Clinton took the middle Way over the Hills and came upon the Rebels in Flank, soon after General Grant had posted himself in Front; and, while these were engaged, or rather keeping the Rebels at Bay and amusing them, General Howe with the third Column advanced upon them by a Circuit on their Rear, and nearly hemmed them in. The Rebels, finding this, did not stand a Minute, but all-amazed run with Precipitation to their Lines for the most Part; and the rest, being prevented in their Retreat, were either cut to Pieces, taken Prisoners, or scattered into the Woods, where our People have been hunting and destroying them from Day to Day. The Eagerness and Intrepidity of the Troops is beyond Description. They could not however beat them at running; but they followed them as closely as they could, and with a Spirit which even their Officers could scarcely restrain. Our People suffered most by little Ambuscades behind the Hedges. Considering the Ground, which is rather broken, and strong, the Loss on our Part is as little as could have been expected. We had 54 killed, about 140 wounded, and about 20 missing. Lord Stirling and Genl Sullivan, late a Member of the Congress, with about 90 Officers, are among the Prisoners, with whom for their Number we scarce know what to do. Many of them, principally Irish Emigrants, have offered to enter into the King's Service. They aver, that the Rebel Army was formed in great Measure by Compulsion, and kept together by great Watchfulness and Constraint. The Victory of this Day put His Majesty's Troops in Possession of all Long Island, except the small Peninsula of Brookland.

In the Afternoon of the 28th the King's Army broke Ground and advanced to form a Battery against a high round Fort, which the Rebels have constructed near the Isthmus at Brookland. They strove to dislodge the Troops, fully aware of the Consequences of this Post, and that the Possession of this Ground, which overlooks Governor's Island and the Fort, would give our People the Command [of] both of them and the Town. Their Efforts were loose and languid, and of course in vain. Two of our Men only were slightly wounded by their Fire of Cannon and small Arms, continued for the Space of four Hours.

The next Evening, they precipitately evacuated all their numerous Works and Intrenchments upon Long Island; and so precipitately, that many of them were drowned in attempting to pass over to New York Island. Our People were much surprized at an Abandonment, which to have forced from Men tolerably brave and determined, must have cost a great deal of Time and many Lives. I have walked over these Works, and, though

I am no Judge of Fortification; I can clearly see with what infinite Labor and Expence they must have been constructed. Many of them are of great Use to the Troops both for Harbor & Defence. The Reason of so sudden an Evacuation, I am informed, was this: The next Day after their Defeat, a Party of New England Men, who were posted in Connecticut Sound near Hell Gate, came down in great Agitation to the main Body of the Rebels, with the News of some Ships of War passing through the Sound, with the view of preventing their Retreat. Not recovered from the Terror of their Defeat, this Intelligence threw them into the utmost Consternation, and occasioned the hasty Flight I have mentioned. 'Tis observed of these People in general, that they are exceedingly careful of the Security of their Retreat, and that all their Works are constructed as much with a View to an easy Abandonment, as to the Annoyance of an Enemy. The Thought of being surrounded annihilates all their Courage.

The Situation of this People is becoming desperate; and their actual Distresses, to say nothing of their Fears, increase upon them daily. By the Battle, they lost in Killed, Wounded and Prisoners above 3000 Men, which we can account for; and, besides these, the Woods are so noisome with the Stench of the dead Carcasses, which the Hessians left in them, that they are in many Places inaccessible. A contagious Disorder also prevails in their Army; and 7000 of them are said to be sick and incapable of Service. — Jealousies and Feuds prevail among themselves; and they are reported to have lost their former implicit Confidence in their Commanders. Besides all this, the New England Provinces in particular have so entirely devoted themselves to Arms during this last Summer, that their Lands for the most Part have remained untilled; and I am informed by a Man of Character, just escaped from that Country, that their Stock of Cloathing is almost exhausted, and that they have not one eighth of the Quantity requisite for their Covering during the ensuing Winter. In short, the Rebel Force is becoming a Rope of Sand, which a few more Trials will probably break in Pieces.

I mentioned to Your Lordship, that we had among our Prisoners the Rebel General Sullivan and the titular Lord Stirling, two such despicable Characters, that nothing proves more the Want of real Officers or valuable Men among the Rebels, than the Employment and Trust of Persons like these. I have been in the Company of both, The former was once a Servant, afterwards a Lawyer, then a Delegate to the Congress from New Hampshire, and at length a General of the Rebel Army. He was the principal Instigator of the Confusions in New Hampshire, and is remarkable neither for Decency nor Probity, but very much for a Species of low Chicane, in which the Lawyers in general of this Country are known to excel, and by which he himself has succeeded to his present Eminence of Situation. Modesty has not been remembered to embarrass either him or his Colleague, who is a thousand times worse than nothing in his Circumstances, and is said to have made this desperate Push to get rid of the Inconvenience of his legal Obligations. With such Characters, indeed, as the present Rulers of this Country are in general, it would be disgraceful, if not impolitic, to have any Sort of Intercourse. The Americans have an Adage, which I embrace in its full Extent. They say, "If Great Britain cannot conquer us, she cannot govern us." And I add, If Great Britain do not so govern them now, and so settle their Polity, as to render it unnecessary to conquer them in future, she will not govern them long. Pardon me, My Lord, if I add further, that her Counsels must dictate: Mere Conferences, I fear, will have no Conclusions to her future Interest, whatever they may have to a little temporary Peace. This I learn upon the Spot, and can easily forsee in the Constitution of Things and in the Spirit and Manners of the People. Another Campaign will expend the best Money Great Britain has laid out for a Century, considering American Affairs either in a political or commercial Light. I could explain this Position very fully, and I believe with some Demonstration; but I will not obtrude my own private Opinions, as I fear I shall sufficiently tire Your Lordship with the Recital only of Occurrences.

A Detachment of Hessians took Possession of Governor's Island on the 2d of September, which, though the Rebels had fortified it with great Labor, they abandoned without any Compulsion. We have found here and in other Places above 30 Cannon, which were spiked so injudiciously, that our Engineers have rendered almost all of them fit for Service.

I have made an Excursion upon Long Island, and own it to be one of the most pleasant and fertile Spots I have ever seen. But when I survey the Depredations and Ruin, the Bloodshed and Distraction, and all the other Miseries of this once happy Region, I cannot help deploring the Condition of its melancholy Inhabitants, and abhoring the Dishonesty and Ambition of those Men, who, under the specious Pretences of Patriotism and public Virtue, have been the Authors and Abettors of these Calamities. From what I have seen here, I look with a double Horror upon the Persons, who would light up a similar Flame, and incite the like Enormities at Home.

I did expect to have had the Honor of congratulating Your Lordship on the entire Possession of New York City and Island by His Majesty's Troops, before I closed this Letter, and am happy to think, it will, in all human Probability, be the Case, long before You can receive it. The sudden Departure of the Packet curtails a Letter which is already of an enormous Length, and obliges me to make a rather abrupt Conclusion. I cannot however finish it, nor even my Life itself, without the sincere and heart-felt Satisfaction of being, upon the firmest Considerations, My Lord, Your Lordship's [&c.]

[Philadelphia] Thursday, September 5, 1776

Resolved, That General Sullivan be requested to inform Lord Howe, that this Congress, being the representatives of the free and independent states of America, cannot, with propriety, send any of its members to confer with his lordship in their private characters; but that, ever desirous of establishing peace on reasonable terms, they will send a committee of their body to know whether he has any authority to treat with persons authorized by Congress for that purpose, in behalf of America, and what that authority is, and to hear such propositions as he shall think fit to make respecting the same:

That the president be desired to write to General Washington, and acquaint him that it is the opinion of Congress, that no proposals for making peace between Great Britain and the United States of America ought to be received or attended to, unless the same be made in writing, and addressed to the representatives of the said states in Congress, or persons authorized by them: And, if application be made to him by any of the commanders of the British forces on that subject, that he inform them that these United States, who entered into the war only for the defence of their lives and liberties, will cheerfully agree to peace on reasonable terms, whenever such shall be proposed to them in manner aforesaid.

GOVERNOR PATRICK TONYN TO COLONEL AUGUSTINE PREVOST[1]

Sir,

The repeated intelligence from Georgia, and the North of this Province, makes it absolutely requisite, for the safety of the Planters on St John's River, to establish a Naval force there –

For this purpose I have engaged the Sloop Rebecca Captain Mowbray of ten Guns with nine men of the Captains, and [six] Seamen which I have added, but the late instance to attempt to man her proving ineffectual, I am compelled to request that a detachment of His Majesty's Troops of an Officer and 35 Private may be fixed on Board Captain Mowbray, to act as a Military force in conjunction with the detachment now established on Saint John's River.

His Majestys Schooner St John of four Guns being also to proceed immediately to that River, Lieutenant Grant has made application for a Serjeant and twelve, to be fixed on Board the said Schooner –

I am therefore compelled from the situation of that part of His Majesty's Province, to request of you, that the above Assistance be given to the above mentioned Vessels, with all imaginable dispatch, who have received directions to proceed forthwith to St Johns River –

Mr [Andrew] Turnbull at Smyrnea having represented the Mutinous disposition of the Settlers under his management and his apprehensions of their designs, obliges me to request that the detachment now there may be augmented to eighteen or twenty men. I have the honour to be with regard and esteem Sir [&c.]

JOHM ADAMS TO ABIGAIL ADAMS[1]

[Philadelphia] Fryday Septr. 6. 1776

This day, I think, has been the most remarkable of all. [Major General John] Sullivan came here from Lord Howe, five days ago with a Message that his Lordship desired a half an Hours Conversation with some of the Members of Congress, in their private Capacities. We have spent three or four days in debating whether We should take any Notice of it. I have, to the Utmost of my Abilities during the whole Time, opposed our taking any Notice of it. But at last it was determined by a Majority "that the Congress being the Representatives of the free and independent states of America, it was improper to appoint any of their Members to confer, in their private Characters with his Lordship. But they would appoint a Committee of their Body, to wait on him, to know whether he had Power, to treat with Congress upon Terms of Peace and to hear any Propositions, that his Lordship may think proper to make."

When the Committee came to be ballotted for, Dr. Franklin and your humble servant, were unanimously chosen. Coll. R. H. Lee and Mr. [Edward] Rutledge, had an equal Number: but upon a second Vote Mr. R. was chosen. I requested to be excused, but was desired to consider of it untill tomorrow. My Friends here Advise me to go. All the stanch and intrepid, are very earnest with me to go, and the timid and wavering, if any such there are, agree in the request. So I believe I shall undertake the Journey. I doubt whether his Lordship will see Us, but the same Committee will be directed to inquire into the State of the Army, at New York, so that there will be Business enough, if his Lordship makes none. — It would fill this Letter Book, to give you all the Arguments, for and against this Measure, if I had Liberty to attempt it. — His Lordship seems to have been playing off a Number of Machiavillian Maneuvres, in order to throw upon Us the Odium of continuing this War. Those who have been Advocates for the Appointment of this Committee, are for opposing Maneuvre to Maneuvre, and are confident that the Consequence will be, that the Odium will fall upon him. However this may be, my Lesson is plain, to ask a few Questions, and take his Answers.

I can think of but one Reason for their putting me upon this Embassy, and that is this. An Idea has crept into many Minds here that his Lordship is such another as Mr. [Thomas] Hutchinson, and they may possibly think that a Man who has been accustomed to penetrate into the mazy Windings of Hutchinsons Heart, and the serpentine Wiles of his Head, may be tolerably qualified to converse with his Lordship.

I on my part will give every assistance required in getting her ready for sea – and do take upon me to say (if her bottom is in proper Order) I will have her ready nearly as soon as any Dispatches your Excellency may have to send and as in the present State of Affairs it would in my Opinion be improper in me to quit the province I propose forwarding the Removal of timber &c up to this place and to give every assistance in putting it in a State of defence –

[Extract] Braintree Sepbr. 7 1776

Tis said that the Efforts of our Enemies will be to stop the communication between the colonies by taking possession of Hudsons Bay [sic River]. Can it be effected? The Milford frigate rides triumphant in our Bay, taking vessels every day, and no Colony nor Continental vessel has yet attempted to hinder her. She mounts but 28 Guns but is one of the finest sailors in the British Navy. They complain we have not weighty mettle enough and I suppose truly. The Rage for privateering is as great here as any where and I believe the success has been as great.

Dear General, Wind Mill Point September 7th 1776

I wrote you the 2nd Instant from Willsborough by Lieut [James] Calderwood, the same Evening Anchored at Schuylers Island, & on the 3d Instant arrived safe at this Place, which is 4, or 5 miles from the Isle Aux Tate,[2] and 7 miles from the Isle aux Mott, we found the Isle aux Tate occupied by the Enemy, and several hundred Men encamped, between that & us, who the Evening of our arrival made a precipitate retreat

I have posted my Guard Boats, at a Point running into the Lake about one Mile below us, The Enemies Boats have several Times, appeared on the Lake with a View of decoying our Boats but I have never suffered them to be pursued; Lieutenant [Benjamin] Whitcomb arrived here the 5th in the Evening and went off the same Night with three Men for St. Johns on the Westside, I sent off Ensign [Thomas] McCoy early the next Morning on the Eastside, with three Men, they are to send me intelligence from time to time I expect to hear from them to Morrow early yesterday morning the Boats were ordered on Shore to Cut Fascines to fix on the Bows and Sides of the Gondolas to prevent the Enemies boarding and to keep off small Shot. One of the Boats went on Shore contrary to Orders before the others were ready, they were attacked by a Party of Savages, who pursued them into the Water. They all reached the Boat, but before they could row off, three were killed, and Six wounded the Party was headed by a Regular Officer, who called to our People to resign themselves, on our firing a few Shot among them they immediately dispersed. a party was sent on Shore who found a laced Beaver hat, the Button marke 47th Regiment. The Lee and Gondola arrived here yesterday morning, we are moor'd in a Line a Cross the Lake, insuch a manner, it will be impossible for a Batteau to pass us. — I hope the Gallies are nearly compleated, the Force of the Enemy is uncertain, however they have this advantage that they can Man all their Batteaux with Soldiers whenever they think proper to attack us, and our Vessels are solow that numbers may carry them by boarding, this must be attended with great Loss on their side, as I am Positive they will notbe able to surprize us. If I find the Enemy have a considerable Naval Force I design to retire, to Cumberland Head or Schuylers Island untill joined by the three Row Gallies, which will be Superior to all our present Force, when the whole are joined, I believe the Isle a Mott will be the best Stand as the Enemy can bring nothing against us by Land nor will they dare to Come on the Island, as by our Guard boats we can prevent, any Boats going from Missisque Bay, as you have more Troops at Tyconderoga than you want, will it not be prudent to send up one thousand or fifteen hundred Men, who might encamp on the Isle aux Mott, and be ready at all times to assist us if attacked twenty Men to a Batteau will be sufficient, they might Load under Cover of the Vessels, push out and Fire, & retire under cover again, & If the Enemies Boats should make their principal Attack on any particular Vessel these Batteaux might Assist her; each should be fixed for a Swivel in each end, and if they are armed one should be fixed in them, if you should think it necessary tosend a Detachment, it will be necessary to bring intrenching Tools, that they may cover themselves from Small Arms. –

We have but very indifferent Men, in general, great part of those who shipped for Seamen know very little of the Matter three or four good Gunners are wanted enclosed is a List of our Sick, who increase fast, I have sent up in three Batteaux 23 Men, who will be of no service for some time, I wish 50 Seamen could be procured and sent down, I inclose you a Letter from Samuel Chaise Esqr you will observe he requests an explanation of your Letter to Mr Adams, He observes my Character is much injured by a Report prevailing in Philadelphia of my having sequestered the Goods seized in Montreal, as you have had an Opportunity of hearing that Matter canvassed on the Tryal of Colonel [Moses] Hazen, I beg you will be kind enought to write your Sentiments to him on the Matter I cannot but think it extreamly cruel, when I have sacrafised my Ease, Health and great Part of my private Property in the Cause of my Country, to be Caluminated as a Robber and thief, at a Time too when I have it not in my Power to be heard in my own Defence.

The 15th of August when we left Tyconderoga the fleet were victualed for thirty Days, which Time is elapsed except 6 Days, we have on board the Fleet Six or eight Days Provision besides twenty Barrells of flour, left at Crown Point to be baked, and ten Barrells of Pork which I have ordered Lieutenant Calderwood to bring down, which will serve the Fleet to the 20th, as the Lake is often very difficult to pass for a number of days we aught to have at least one Months Provisions on hand. Major [David] Grier goes up with the Sick to whom I must refer you for particulars.

We are very anxious to hear from New York, hope soon to have that pleasure by one of the Gallies, which I think must be compleated by this Time – please to make my Compliments to the Gentlemen of your Family and believe me with much respect, esteem and Affection Dear General [&c.]

Decr. [sic September 7, 1776]

In the bay below N. York the british fleet made a great display; the no. of the vessells of all sizes amounted to about 300; and as they spread their sails to dry — after a rain— they covered a large extent of the water.

The admirals ship — the Eagle of 64 guns appearing in full sight, known by her flag, Capt. [David] Bushnell — of the sappers & miners — having prepared his submarine engine — it was sent one night, with a magazine of powder attached to it — under the command of a serjeant and 12 men — the party proceeded to the ship — having a pointed rod at top designed to be stuck into the ships bottom, but this point not taking effect — the tide which was strong — wafted the engine away from under the ship & the enterprise failed. The sergeant who had the command gave me a particular narrative of the proceeding, and said that he was of opinion that the projecting point struck the head of a bolt which prevented its success; but I judged it as probable that the point was prevented from entering the ship by the copper sheathing.[2]

This Morning, the Fowey, Capt. G[eorge]. Montagu, came into the Harbor from North Carolina.

Great Preparations have been making all this Day; and about 80 Flat-bottomed Boats were made ready for a further Debarkation of Troops, and for a further attack upon the Rebels.

A slight alarm happened to-night from the Enemy's Boats approaching too near; they were soon driven back by the Musketry in our Boats. Their Intention was, as we apprehended, to bring down 2 or 3 Fire-ships to set adrift in the Fleet.

Thomas Randall to the New York Provincial Congress

Gentlemen — Elizabethtown, Sept. 7th, 1776.

Enclosed is a letter from the Lieutenant of your schooner Gen. Putnam, who informs you that the captain went away without letting him know of his going, and of course it must be a neglect of his duty. You also have a petition from the ship's company, which complaint I fear is too true; you will be pleased to take such steps as you think fit; for my part I think it would be best to appoint a new commander for her; the lieut. I believe would be more industrious in the service. I also think it would not be amiss to order the people to be paid about one half of their wages, to supply them with clothes and stores. . . .

WILLIAM GOODRICH TO THE PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL OF SAFETY[1]

Philadelphia Goal, 7th Sept'r, 1776

Gentlemen of the Counsel of Safety:

I now beg leaf to inform you of my transactions while I was imployed in fetching in gunpowder for the use of the Collony of Virginia, and detained a prissinner under Lord Dunmore on that Account, Which is as follows, Viz:

Sometime in July, in the year of 1775, I was imployed by Mr. Thomas Newton, of Norfolk, to fetch in a quantity of gunpowder for the use of the collony of Virginia, and was intrusted with Bills of exchange on London to the amount of five thousand pounds Sterling, to purchase the same with. I proceeded to the West indies with all possable disspatch and disposed of the said bills of exchange, agreeable to my directions from Mr. Newton. Then I went to St. Eustatia, Martinico and Sundry other french Islands, and purchased all the gunpowder I could find in those Islands, which did not exceed five thousand weight. And knowing at that time that the Collony of Virginia was laying in a defenceless state, I took the above quantity of gunpowder into a small sloop of mine, with a quantity of Oznabriges on my own Acc't, and proceeded with same to the head of paspotank river, in North Carolina, where I landed the powder and oznabriges all safe. From thence I was preceding to Norfolk, in Virginia, over land, there to see Mr. Thomas Newton, the gentleman who imployed me to go on the powder expedition. On my way to Norfolk I was informed that the said Newton had moved from that and it would be onsafe for me to go there, as Lord Dunmore was a keeping a lookout and wanted to take me, owing to an information lodged against me to Lord Dunmore of my being gone out after gunpowder.

When I left the west indies I left the remainder part of the Cuntrie's money in the hands of Isaac Vandam, Merchant at St. Eustatia, with orders to lay the same out in gunpowder, and have the same ready at St. Eustatia on my return, a coppy of which I took with me. My receiving information that Dunmore Wanted to take me, maid me alter my corse and go to Portsmouth, Where I expected to have seen my family; but on my arrival There, I saw no one but Mr. Robert Shedden, who informed me that my Father's and my family was moved up to a Plantation of my Father's that was about twenty-five miles back in the Cuntry, and that I must leave the town eme-diately as Lord Dunmore was keeping the strictest lookout for you, which I did. I proceeded to my family. Mr. Shedden sent word to my Father & Brother to inform them of my safe arrival, Who were then down at the Capes, the one at the North cape and the other at the south Cape, keeping a lookout for me, and a small Schooner which they expected in, loaded with corse Linens. After staying one or two days with my family, I proceeded to Williamsburg, and on my way I met with Mr. Newton, who I inform'd of my proceedings, which gave him satisfaction, & he desired that I would proceed to Williamsburg and there give an account of my proceedings to Mr. R. C. Nicholus, who it allso gave Satisfaction to.

From Williamsburg I returned to my Father's plantation, where my Family was, and muved my Wife, who was then big with Child, and looking to layin in the corse of a month or so, to Mrs. Brown's, an old Midwifes, where I thought She might remain in Safety while I was gone for the remainder part of This gunpowder. As soon as I got her well settled there and provided her with necessaries of Life, I proceeded to my Father's plantation, on my way to St. Eustatia, but on my arrival there my Father wan't returned from the cape, who I wanted to see before I went to 'Statia, which induced me to stay there that night, and, unluckey for me, there came Eight men and an officer that night and took me a prissenner, about two o'clock in the morning, and Carryed me on board of the Otter Sloop-of-War.

On my Father's hearing of this misfortune of mine, he returned from the Cape, and took the directions I left with Mr. Vandam and went to the head of paspotank, where the small Vessel was laying that I brought in the powder and Oznabriges with, and was proceeding to St. Eustatia in order to take in hand the powder expidition, but onluckily got taiken at Ocrocock Bar, by two of the king's Croosers that was there, and brought a prissonner on board of the Otter, with all his papers, among which was a Coppy of Vandam's orders, which I left with him. Upon Lord Dunmore Examineing of this Coppy of Direction that I left with Mr. Vandam, he found that I had left a considerable sum of money belonging to the Colony of Virginia in the hands of Vandam, at St. Eustatia, to be laid out in gunpowder; upon which, his Lordship obliged me to go on board of an armed tender, and sent me to St. Eustatia, giveing of me possative orders to take that gunpowder, and what money that should not be laid out, and fetch the same to him.

When arrived at St. Eustatia, I informed Mr. Vandam of My misfortune, and told him that I was sent there by Lord Dunmore with such instructions, which I shewed to him, telling of him, at the same time, that we must fall upon some plan to keep Lord Dunmore from Geting of this money, as I did not think it was Just that he should have it, which Vandam readyly agred to, and the money is now laying in the hands of Mr. Vandam's Executors, as he has since departed this Life. Mr. Vandam had the powder ready, agreeable to my directions, which he sold afterwards to a New York Sloop that was laying in the rhoad.

On my return from St. Eustatia to Virginia, I waited on Lord Dunmore and Shode him a note from Mr. Vandam Promissing to pay the sum of money I left in his hands, On his receiveing advice that the bills of exchange was duly Honoured, and not before, as he was an indorser on the bills which he had the money for, and did not think himself safe in delivering the money before then, which note Lord Dunmore took and was satisfyed with; and in about one week his Lordship granted me my perole to go and see my family where I staid three days and returned on board remaining a prissinnor, in which time Lord Dunmore sent for me several times desireing that I would Join government, which I refused to do, telling of his Lordship that I could not think of taking up arm against a cuntry that was Acting in devence of there Liberties.

Now the people of the cuntry began to susspect that I had fotch in the cuntries' money to Lord Dunmore, which Occaisoned the Convention to stop the payment of a considerable sum of money due my brother & self for a quantity of corse linen sold them in October last. The people of the Cuntry grew so inragedd, they went to the house where my wife was, and when she had been but three Days delivered of a child, with a fixed reasulution to burn the house over her head, which it was as much as some of my friends could do to keep them from. My Friends was obliged to send my wife of[f] in a fortnight after she was delivered as she run a risque of her life while on shore.

After this I staid on board of a Vessel of my own for three months on my perole not to go on shore; after which Time Lord Dunmore sent for me and desireing that I would Take charge of one of the Tenders, which I still refused to do. This Occasion'd his Lordship to grow a little mad. "What," says he, "don't the ill treatment of those fellows on shore to Mrs. Goodrich lead you to resent it?" I replyed that I did not think it was right to resent the ill treatment of a few Invious men on the whole Cuntry, and that I could not take up armes agains them with a clair Contience as long as they ware acting in defence of there Liberties. "But," says he, "you may depend upon it that they mean to Shake of[f] their dependence on grate brittain?" Then I told his Lordship that if he would alow me to remain nuteral untill they did declare themselves free and independent of grate brittain, that I should then look upon myself to be in duty bound to take a part in favour of grate brittain, and would do avery thing in My power to appress the Americans in such a declaration. Upon which we parted, and I do declair upon my honour, Gentlemen, that I did not do nothing in favour of government but what I was obleged to do before they Declared for Independence. Upon the declaration of Independence in Virginia, I told Lord Dunmore that I was then ready and willing to take a part in favor of grate brittain Agreeable to my promiss, provided that his Lordship would furnish me with a propper Vessel well man'd and arm'd, Which his Lordship agreed to do, and sent me to Bermudas in the armed sloop, the Lady susan, to purchase a Brigg that Would carry Eighteen guns. When at Bermudas, there was no such Vessel to be had, and on my return from Bermudas, I met with the misfortune of falling in with the brig Lexington, Capt. Berry [John Barry], who took me and sent me here.[2] This, gentlemen, I hope you will take to your Consedrations, and have me treated genteally, as a prissonner of war ought to be, and not like a thief or a Robber, as you have done by putting of me in Close confinement, and not alowing of me to speak to any person. I am, gentlemen, a constant and sinseer well-wisher to the piece and well fair of America, while under the power & authority of Grate Brittain.

Journal of the Council of West Florida [1]

[Pensacola] 7th September 1776.

We the Subscribing Members of His Majesty's Council therefore recommend it to your Excellency that you will be pleased to order His Majesty's Engineer to put the Fort of Mobile in such a temporary State of defence as may be thought Sufficient to Repell any Attack from the Rebels as the Loss of it will be Attended with the following dangerous Consequences — first That it will Cut off all our Communication with the Chactaws, Chickesaws and all the other Tribes of Indians to the westward as far as the banks of the Mississippi and alienate those tribes from His Majesty's Interest with the total loss of the Indian trade which is at present very considerable and will put and end to all Commerce between Great Britain and the River Mississippi which will infallibly fall into their Possession

Secondly That it will be Seperating us from the Western part of the Province and prevent this Colony from Supplying the West India Islands with Lumber &c. and this place with such Provisions as are Necessary for its Subsistance. . . .

A Majority of the Board then gave it as their Opinion and advice that His Excellency the Governor Should give Orders to the respective Officers of the Customs at Pensacola not to clear out any Vessels now in this Harbour bound to the River Mississippi & should also Apply to Lieut Cobb the Commanding Officer of the Armed Sloops here to prevent any such Vessels from going out of the Harbour untill farther intelligence arrives in Order that these Vessels may be prevented from giving intelligence or affording any Assistance in transporting the Rebel Troops which may come against us thro' the Channel of the Mississippi & whom they think there is reason to expect. . . .

Dear General, Isle aux Mott September 8th 1776 —

When I wrote the foregoing Letter I designed sending off the Batteaux last evening but was prevented by the Stormy weather lastnight the Enemy were heard by the Guard Boats and the People onboard the Vessels near inshore onbothsides of us several Trees were felled and lights discovered. I believe the Enemy were erecting Batteries, which might have injured us as the Lake is only one and a Quarter Miles over and their Design was doubtless tohave attacked us both by land and Water at the Same Time. I make no Doubt we should have been more than a Match for them, but did not think it prudent to Run any Risque, as it would answer no good Purpose. I therefore ordered the Fleet under way this Morning, and at 2 OClock P. M. anchored at this Place here the Lake is about two Miles over and safe Anchorage we effectually secure any Boats passing us — just as we came to Anchor Lieutenant [John] Brooks came on Board, sent down by Colonel [Thomas] Hartley in Consequence of hearing our Cannon fired at the Indians on Sunday Morning. I have thought it necessary to dispatch him back again that you may be out of Suspence with regard to us. Four Guard Boats are constantly out, the Rounds go every two Hours, at Night, and every precaution is taken to prevent being surprized. —

Our men are extremely bare of Cloathing and the Season is coming onsevere & more so onthe Water than land. If a WatchCoat or Blanket & one Shirt could be sent for each Man it will be of great Service for them. Rum is another necessary Article When the Howitz arrive, I beg three or four of Six Inches may be sent us mounted, on Field Carriages, with Shells &c. &c. 50 Swivels are much wanted, the last Vessels h[ave none] I am [&c.]

MAJOR GENERAL PHILIP SCHUYLER TO JOHN HANCOCK[1]

[Extract] Albany September 8th 1776

The Season advances so fast that it is Time to think of preparing the Winter Quarters for such Troops as are not to be kept in Garrison . . . perhaps it would be best not to canton the Troops too far from Tyonderoga at it may be supposed that an attempt will be made by the Enemy in the Course of the Winter on that post or at least they will try to burn our Navy in order to insure their passage over the Lake in a future Campaign – . . .

Since writing the above a Letter from General Gates of the 5th Instant is come to Hand he observes that "as the Fleet is large and mounts a Number of Cannon and the Body of Troops here very considerable, it is immediately necessary that fifteen Tons of powder, Ten of Lead with Flints and Cartridge paper in proportion should be sent to this post," I have not any of the Articles here and must intreat that they may be sent with all Expedition.

Governor Patrick Tonyn to Lord George Germain[1]

No 24.
My Lord;

In the evening of the 28. August a Ship with some of His Majesty's loyal Subjects and their Effects arrived at an Anchor of[f] this Bar from Cockspur.

The next morning, the Master and the Passengers being ashore, a rebel Brig, supposed to be one Turpin Commander of 16. Guns and a hundred Men run close to the Ship put three boats of their People into her and carried her off/

We have no naval force but the Saint John of four Guns, and Lord William Campbells Schooner of six Guns in this Port for repairs. The first was ten miles up North River cleaning, the latter without Men.

A Sloop pierced for fourteen Guns, belonging to Captain Mowbray, who has been in the Kings royal navy, and a person of much credit and esteem, the same I sent to Captain Berkley's [Andrew Barkley] assistance in February last at Cockspur, had arrived a few days before from the Islands. I engaged him to go out, sent for the St John Schooner in all haste, put ten Guns into the Sloop and endeavoured, My Lord, to Man her; finding it however a difficult task, a subscription was set a foot to encourage the Men to enter on Board, after our utmost exertion, about thirty Men were collected by night, and of them not more than ten Men the Captain told me fit to go to Sea. The Saint John made great dispatch, and by eleven at night was in the road towards the Bar, although she lay Keel out of the water, when my letters reached Lieutenant Grant.

Your Lordship cannot guess at my shock and mortification, for my zeal runs high on such occasions for His Majesty's service.

After applications my Lord to Admiral Shuldham, Sir Peter Parker, and to Lord Howe, for a sufficient naval force for the protection of our Coasts and Rivers, I am, my Lord, utterly in dispair of any maritime assistance.

The Inhabitants are very uneasy my Lord, for the want of such support, and from the very strong reports from all hands, that the rebels intend to attack the Plantations on Saint John River, I have been under the necessity of taking Captain Mowbrays Sloop into His Majesty's Service, for the Protection of the Province, although it be attended, my Lord, with great expence, I have no alternative. Our Rivers are too large to be defended without Vessels upon them, by any number of Troops, less than an Army.

For these reasons, my Lord, I wrote to the Commanding Officer of His Majesty's Troops, of which the enclosed is a Copy, No 1, and to Lieutenant Grant of His Majesty's Schooner, No. 2.[2]

I hope your Lordship will approve these measures, I beg leave to assure you my Lord, in all cases and circumstances, my greatest care and anxiety is to do right. I have the honour to be with the greatest respect, My Lord, Your Lordships [&c.]

. . . A French Frigate arrived the other day from France, with orders to the General to protect all American vessels: A pilot boat belonging to a merchant in Philadelphia was taken the day before yesterday, and sent to Jamaica; a French frigate of 36 guns and a guarda coasta, which last hoisted Continental Colours, were immediately sent after her, with orders to follow her into Port Royal harbour, if they could not overtake her before, and demand her; what will be the consequences time will discover. The French were very much exasperated at her being taken, which was within two leagues of the land.

. . . A Number of prizes have been sent into the different ports of New England since my last, 4 in at Bedford, one at Cape Ann, some at the

Eastward & a number at Providence, chiefly West India men. – The Spirit for Privateering is got to the highest pitch of enthusiasm, almost every Vessell from 20 Tons to 400 is fitting out here; they are in great want of Guns, but with what they dig up on Wharfs and at the Corner's of Streets, they have made out heretofore very well; Small Vessells are gone to Hispaniola for the Cannon of 2, 24 Gun Ships, that are now fitting for the Sea; the Owners have offer'd me 20 £ p Month & 4 shares, to take the Surgeon's birth on board one of 'em. – The Salt-Petre business is still persu'd with spirit, tho' the quantity that has been brot in since June, is but small, but when the Farming business is over we shall have it in as great plenty as ever. –

THOMAS CUSHING TO ROBERT TREAT PAINE[1]

Dear Sir Boston September 9th 1776

I have received your kind favor of the 24 Ultimo – The 24 Gun Frigate might have been out to Sea a month Ago and have cleared her Cost as well as the Cost of the other Frigate, by what prizes she might have taken before this, had she have been furnished with her Guns, the want of these retards every Attempt to fix her off, besides it will be impossible to procure Men till they see she is Compleatly Armed, It is a great pity you have not been able to send the Cannon from Philadelphia; I have received no orders to purchase any here but have from the first been told I should be supplied with them from Philadelphia, however I have tryed in Vain to procure them at Providence, Their Furnace has been so engaged in supplying the two Continental Ships there as well as the Government of Rhode Island with Cannon that they have constantly wrote me I could not be supplied with any till they had fulfilled those Engagements; but I fear (being tempted with a most extravagant Price by the owners of Privateers) they have notwithstanding been Supplying other People even in preferrence to their own Government; Mr Nicholas Brown, one of the owners of the Furnace, has lately wrote me that they Can have Ninety pounds Lm p Ton for Cannon & want to Know Whether I am empowered to Contract for any, but does not Inform me how soon I can be furnished, if I was willing to Contract at that enormous price, which I dare not do without first Consulting Congress, pray let Know what I shall do upon this occasion, provided they at Providence Can furnish me Seasonably –

The Mi[l]ford Frigate and, it is said, some others, are Cruising upon our Coast and taking prizes – The Continental Frigates, if they were now out, might be of eminent service, O for Cannon! The spirit of Privateering prevails so amazingly here that Cannon cannot be procured, if at all, but at a most extravagant price – pray forward them from Philadelphia if possible & send me the dimensions of the Guns by the first opportunity that I may compleat the Carriages, for the General Court apprehending the 24 Gun Frigate will not be a Match for the Milford of 28 Guns are About placing the Guns, they proposed lending to me, on board the Portsmouth Frigate, if Capt Langdon will consent she should go out And Attack the Milford . . .

Your Brethern in the Law have fine times of it, They are making Money as fast almost as they Can receive it, I suppose there never was a better chance for Gentlemen of your Profession getting money than the Present, Privateering prevails so much & such a number of prizes are taken that it makes a vast deal of Business in your Way — Messrs Dana, Lowell, Kent, Morton Hitchburn &c. &c. &c have their hands full —

While writing I received your Favor of the 31 August — The prize ship that had the Ten 9 pounders on board was retaken & Carried to Hallifax — I hear Capt Langdon is appointed by the Congress Agent for the Continental Ships within the State of Newhampshire and as he has had the trouble and fatigue of building & fixing one of them out (which at this difficult day is attended with Ten times the trouble & fatigue as at another time when every thing may be obtained with Ease & barely for asking for) I think it is reasonable & just he should have the Appointment — If I, who have had the care & trouble of building two of these Ships, Should be entirely overlooked, will it not seem as if my conduct with respect to them was disapproved of? As to the Objection made to my being Agent for the prizes on account of it's being incompatable with my other Appointments, it seems this objection was easily got over with respect to Mr Langdon for he is judge of the Common pleas in his Government as well as my self in this Government; with respect to such an Appointment's being incompatable with the place of a Councellor, that seems not to Agree with the Ideas of the Court here, for both the Honble Mr Wm Sever & Mr Richard Derby are Councellors and Notwithstanding this they have both been appointed by the Council Agents for the Colonial Vessells of War, one for the southern District, the other for the Middle District; As I have had an Infinite deal of trouble in building & Collecting the Materials for these ships I should think it hard if any one else was appointed to have the Care of them & from time to time to furnish them with Supplies, It will be full enough for one man to have the Charge of the Prizes, and for Another to have the Care of these & the other Continental privateers & from time to time to supply them with Provisions, Stores of all Kinds, Mast, Yards, Cables and other riggen as they may stand in Need of them — perhaps this is the appointment Capt Langdon has got pray let me know particularly what his appointment is & what precisely is his Duty, I am oblidged to you for the tender of your services Upon this occasion & doubt Not I shall experience the benefit of them —

I remain with respect [&c.]

GOVERNOR JONATHAN TRUMBULL TO GOVERNOR NICHOLAS COOKE[1]

Sir Lebanon Septemr 9th 1776

Since my last I have made Enquiry what naval Force can be had in this State to assist in an Attempt to clear the sound of the Enemies Ships – and find we can soon have a Ship mounting 20 Guns, 9 lbders, and a Brigantine of 16 Guns ready for that Service; we could also add another Brigantine of 8 Guns could we procure Cannon to put upon her, besides our Galleys, which we hope may be able to join them

I persuade myself You are advised of the present Situation of our Army and the Enemy, from which it will appear how much it imports the Success of the Army under General Washington, as well as the Safety of these States to atchieve this Enterprize – Could Commodore Hopkins be prevailed upon to join the Force under his Comand with Your Gallies and such naval Force as your State can furnish to our Ship Briga and Gallies I flatter myself it would be sufficient to effect the purpose intended. if greater Force should be thought necessary, there are two privateers in the Harbour of New London that may be had to assist them.

GOVERNOR JONATHAN TRUMBULL TO THE MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL COURT[1]

Gentlemen – Lebanon Septr 9th 1776 –

The vast Importance of preventing the Ministerial Army takeing the Benefit of the Stock on Long Island & Availing themselves of the Advantage of that Post, Assisting such of the Inhabitants to remove with their Effects who are disposed for it, and prevent their Total Seduction, I Apprehend are Matters of more Consequence to the Common cause than we can easily Imagine, to dislodge that Army from Long Island and Destroy the two Ships & Tenders in the Sound which at present prevent Supplies that way by Water to Our Army, might at one blow in a great Measure Relieve Our Bleeding Country from its Impending Danger –

How far it wou'd be Practicable or what Measures are proper to take at this Alarming Crisis is Matter of Serious Concern with Us – Its Supposed here that in Case an Attempt Shou'd be made to Collect a Force at the East end of Long Island to Remove Stock &c That a Number of Whale Boats wou'd be Absolutely Necessary to Troops Stores Supplies &c as they might Avoid all the Vessels of Force the Enemy cou'd send to Obstruct us – I am Informed that a large Number of Whale Boats that belong to the Continent are at and near Boston and might be used for that Important purpose we have but very few with us. I am Also Informed that a Regt is Ordered from you to Providence to replace the Continental Battallion removed from the State of Rhode Island, & Whether your Regiment cou'd not come in the Whale Boats to Providence Carrying them A Cross the Land at Buzzards Bay, is I apprehend Worthy of your Consideration, and to be executed without Delay We are Equipping what Naval Force we have with all Possible Expedition, we are Exerting Ourselves & desirous to Unite Our Whole Strength with the Other States in Our Common Cause – I dont doubt of your Utmost Attention and Most Vigorous Exertions therein. Must Intreat your Answer to this & such other Measures as you Judge may be Beneficial –

In Committee of Safety for the State of New York
Fishkill Septr. 9th 1776

Gentlemen. Sensible of the great Importance of the Posts in the highlands, We have lately directed an enquiry into their Situation which will appear from the inclosed Return to be far from such as we could wish. –

The Necessity General Washington has of all the Troops that compose his Army at New York, prevented his sparing to those Fortresses sufficient Hell Gate, New York, Showing American Fortifications.

Garrisons or the necessary Stores — What may be the fate of the Country below the highlands is as yet uncertain and may possibly depend on the event of a single Battle — should these Posts be properly secured we cannot but hope that the greater part of this State might nevertheless be retained; and the Communication between the Northern and Southern States be by that Means kept up — For which Reason we wish you to call the Attention of the Congress to an Object of whose Importance they have already been sensible and to ask a proper supply of Stores. We have already afforded them all in our Power to supply — Fire Ships would be of great use, yet for want of Materials we are unable to proceed in preparing them. Seamen cannot be procured here to man our armed Vessels without the greatest Delay unless drafted from the Army — perhaps they may be got at Philadelphia. —

By the inclosed Resolves you will find that we have endeavoured to reinforce the Garrisons in the highlands — As these Men are all taken from the Plough, we are very anxious to have them relieved as soon as the Circumstances of the Continent will admit. —

We have borrowed of the State of Connecticut twenty Pieces of Cannon, ten Twelve and ten Six Pounders for the Forts — We wish they were heavier, but we fear this Deficiency cannot be supplyed, and therefore must endeavour to do without them — You will find by the enclosed Resolves that we have taken Measures to encrease the Number of our field Artillery. You will be mindful to transmit us every public Resolve of Congress, and at least one of the Pensilvania Gazattee's every Week — We remain Gentlemen [&c.]

Diary of Frederick Mackenzie [1]

[Long Island] 9th Sept Two Ships of War are expected up the East River, as soon as the Wind and tide serves for their pafsing the town. Many of the flat boats have come up the River during the late nights, and are afsembled in Hallet's Cove near Hellgate. More are expected up this night, and the whole will be collected there.

Everything indicates that we shall soon attempt something decisive against the Rebels, but considering the nature of the Shore at Hellgate, and rapidity of the tides and variety of Eddies there, I do not suppose the landing will be made in that place. It appears probable that the erecting batteries against the Enemy's works at Hellgate, and making so much demonstration there, is intended to draw their attention from some other point, for owing to the situation and construction of their principal work, it is extremely difficult to destroy it effectually.

[Extract] Camp below Turtle Bay Sept 9. 1776

Matters continue very still, that I have little to write — We are in hourly expectation of the Enemies Landing on this Island — But they continue still as yet — Except that they have Erected a Battery opposite ours at Hell gate from whence there was yesterday a very brisk Cannonading & Bombardment upon our Fort — & from our fort upon them — I hear they killed one of our Men, wounded Another & have done some Damage to the fort — last Night they were still on both sides — but this morning we hear the Cannon playing very briskly again. The Ship (probably the Rose Capt Wallace) still lies in the East River close by the long Island Shore; at such a Distance, that tis not easy to damage her much. . . .

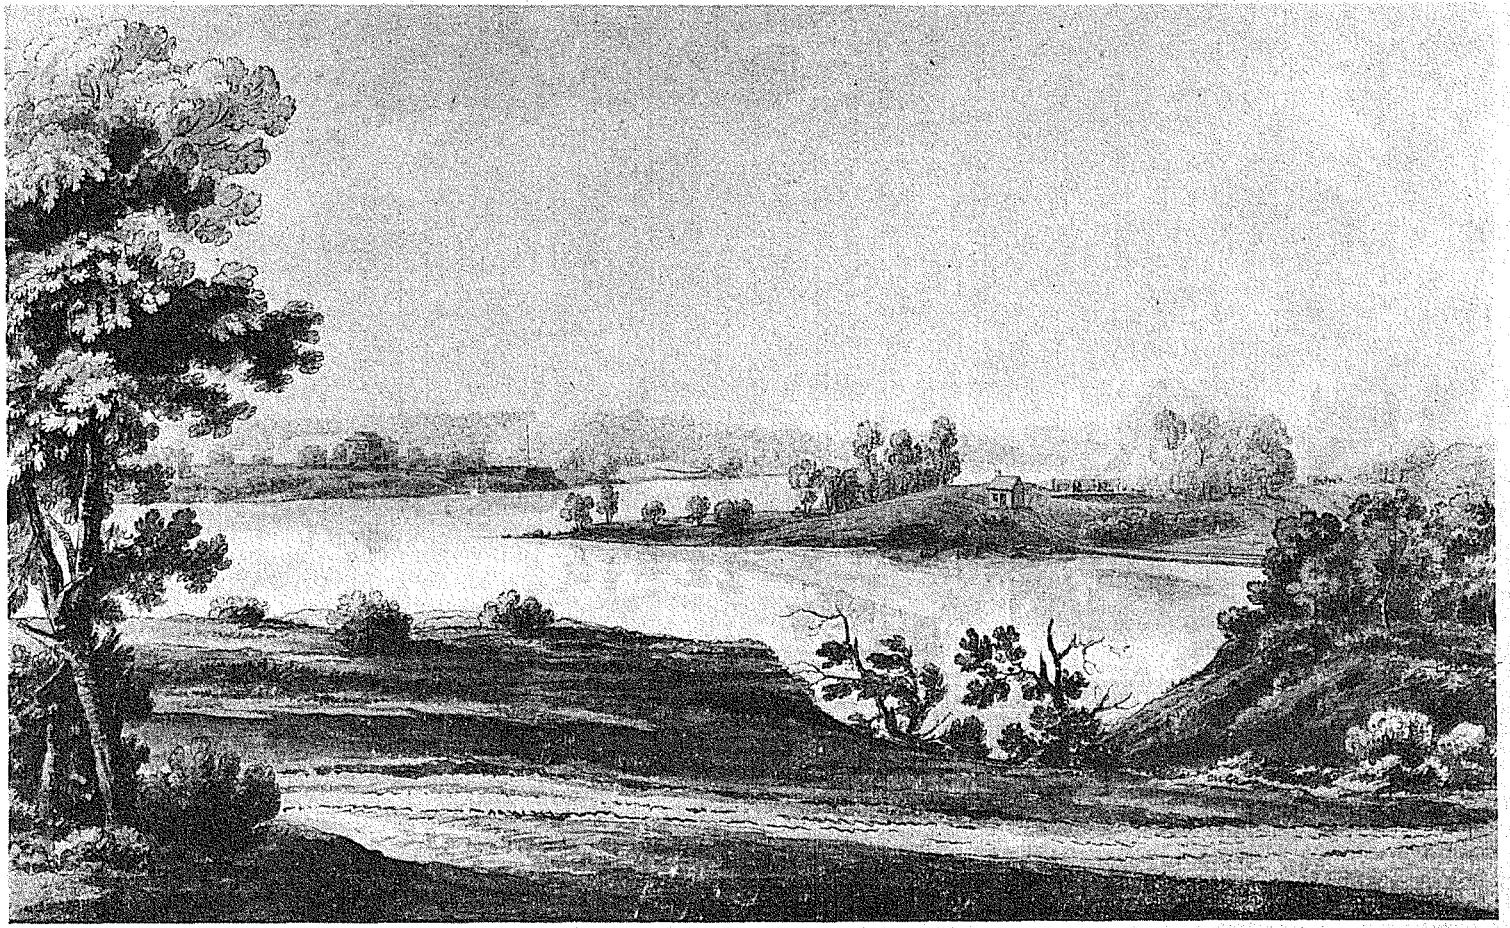
[Extract] Head-Qrs New York, Sept 9th, 1776



I highly approve of your plan and proposition for raising such a naval force as will be sufficient to clear the Sound of the enemy's Ships of War – If Admiral Hopkins will Join you, I should suppose It not only practicable, but a matter of certainty, & If it can be effected, many valuable & salutary consequences must result from It – As to drafting Seamen from the Continental regiments It cannot be done as their Numbers have been reduced so low already by taking men from them for the Galleys, Boats, & other purposes that some of them have hardly any thing left but the Name, besides I must depend chiefly upon them for a successful opposition to the Enemy – If It can be done out of the Militia I shall not have the least objection & heartily wish the Enterprise, when ever attempted may be attended with all possible success – secrecy & despatch will be most likely to give It a happy issue – The enemy's Ships can receive no reinforcements but such as go round Long Isld – Our Works at Hell Gate preventing their sending Ships that way – they are sensible of their Importance & yesterday opened Two, Three Gun Batteries to effect their destruction, but as yet have not materially damaged them & they must be maintained If possible.

New-York Gazette, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1776

New-York, Sept. 9.

Since the Retreat of our Army from Long-Island, the Enemy have extended themselves a considerable Length on the Shore bordering the Sound, and on Tuesday a large Number of them landed on Blackwell's-Island, about three Miles from the City, but the Shot from our Batteries soon made them recross the River. On Wednesday a Ship from the Fleet, (supposed to be a British Hell Gate Battery Opening Fire, September 8, 1776.

Frigate) passed between Governor's Island and Red-Hook, and that Night got up the Sound abreast of the Island the Enemy had been drove from; when, under cover of her Guns, they the next Day again came over to it in large Bodies – This brought on a brisk Cannonade for near two Hours, in which the Ship sustained so great Damage in her Hull, &c. as obliged her to move close in with the Long-Island Shore, for Shelter from our Shot and Bombs. At the same Time of this attack, a firing also began from the Enemies Batteries on Long-Island opposite the City, which was returned with such Spirit, by our People in their Fortresses at and about the Ship-Yards, that they gave us little or no Annoyance since from that Quarter.

Several Men of War now lie within Gun Shot of our main Battery, and the greatest Part of the Fleet behind Governor's-Island tho' they have lately had very favourable Winds to come up to the City; which gives us Reason to think they mean not to attack it by Water till they know the Success of their forces in attempting to land on this Island.

Thursday a Barge was seen in the East-River, sounding the Channel where it is obstructed by scuttled Vessels, but soon made off, as it is supposed she observed our People at the main Fort, preparing to give her a suitable Salutation.

Wednesday a Flag came from the Fleet with a Return of those Officers that were made Prisoners in the late Attack on Long-Island; who we hear are treated with Civility by the British Officers.

Saturday night our Guard Boats for observing the Motions of the Fleet, fell in with those of the Enemy, when a smart Attack began and lasted for some Time, but the latter being reinforced with several Tenders obliged our's to return to their Station.

On Sunday Morning a Cannonade again commenced, supposed to be from our People opposing some new manoevres of the Enemy up the Sound.

No 25.

My Lord; On the 7. by express from the Commanding Officer on St John River the Rebels have appeared on the opposite side of some force, our Planters are greatly alarmed, but I hope the Indians I have sent along the West side of that River will soon compell them to move out of this Province.

The Sloop Captain Mowbray which I was obliged to take through necessity into His Majesty's Service will be of the greatest use in that River, I have also employed a scout Boat with swivels, and have directed that as many as are necessary to perform the service of scouts on the River be employed.

Give me leave to inform your Lordship, the expence of these services not only distress me, but shock me, the expence of employing Rangers is terrible, repairing and puting in order the Fort comes high, I hardly know which way to turn.

I have desired the Commanding Officer to apply to the General to discharge the expences of repairing the Lines by the Kings Troops, and for their allowance of Rum when on that duty, these charges will amount to a considerable Sum, but they are nevertheless absolutely necessary in our present situation

I have done every thing with the greatest frugality and Oeconomy, yet in these times I am startled at the expence.

It is confidently reported that a rebel General of note, with a considerable body of troops arrived at Savannah about a month ago.

The distresses of our frontier Inhabitants are great, they affect me very deeply, I endeavour to lessen them, as much as I can, but, it is not possible in our Situation to remove them.

That your Lordship may know the state of His Majestys Troops, I have the honour to enclose a return.

We are now actually threatened with an invasion. By all accounts from His Majesty's loyal Subjects preparations are making in Carolina and Georgia to besiege this Garrison. Part are to come by the inland water passage, with the Row Gallies, the Men the rebel General [Charles] Lee brought from the North, joined to what can be raised in those two Provinces. Lee has been as far South as Sunbury. I am informed the rebel Generals [John] Armstrong and How [Robert Howe] are to conduct this expedition. Lee I believe is either gone to the North, or is going there. We hear great boastings from Georgia, of what great things they are to do. If they come they may possibly ruin our Plantations. In former letters I have acquainted your Lordship of my suspicions of a part of the Inhabitants of this Province. But, my Lord, If the Plans I have set on foot, to bring the Indians to our assistance take place on this occasion, of which I have not the least doubt, your Lordship, I flatter myself will hear in the end a good account from me, of this vaunted expedition.

I have had the honour to convey to Lord Howe, and the General, an account of these matters. I have the honour to be with the greatest respect, My Lord, Your Lordships [&c.]

Removed at such a distance as his Excellency is, and Involved in a multiplicity of Important business, It is impossible for him to give directions about or to pay attention to the Continental Armed Vessels at the Eastward — Therefore, at the same time that he doubts not but your conduct is right respecting this Appeal, he apprehends you should correspond with the Marine Committee appointed by Congress in all matters that may occur in your department, presuming that they were appointed & intended for that purpose. — His Excellency can only repeat that he has already said, that the Laws prescribed by Congress, are the only Rules by which you can conduct yourself — It is not his wish nor in his powere to give any orders or advice authorizing a deviation from them — If in any instances hardships of a peculiar nature cast up — Congress & Congress alone have it in their power to relieve, on proper representation being made.

The Estate of Colo. Lee, late of Marblehead, having lent the Continent some Guns to fit out their Armed Vessels, which are now wanted & applied for you will deliver Nathanl Tracy Esqr Eight that are at Portsmouth which were taken in some of the prizes — Mr Tracy has a claim to Ten, which his Excellency would have replaced, If we have so many — The reason of mentioning Eight, is, that he has no Account of your having more. Massachusetts Spy, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1776

[Worcester, September 11]

Captain James Tracy sailed from Newbury-Port the seventh of June in the Yankey Hero, for Boston, with twenty-six men only, including officers this number was not a quarter of his complement; he was provisioned for a six months cruize, and was to take in the remainder of his men at Boston; the afternoon he went out, going round Cape Ann he observed a sail in the offing, but in his situation did not think of looking after her. Two boats full manned with their muskets, who had put out after the sail, came on board, and informed him a number of transports had been close in with the Cape that day; fourteen men from the two boats joined him, and sent their boats on shore; he had now forty hands in the whole (only a third of his complement) with these he put away for the sail, which bore E. S. E. about five leagues distance, they perceived her to be a ship, and soon from her management to be a ship of war. As a contest with her must have been very unequal, Capt. Tracy, who intended to make a harbour that night, ordered the brig to be put about for the shore, not then suspecting the ship could come up with him; but he had not tacked ten minutes before the westerly wind died away, and the ship taking a fresh southerly breeze came fast in, endeavouring to cut the brig off from the shore. After some time, the ship thus getting in the wake of the brig, the wind again came fresh to the westward, upon which the brig hauled to the wind in the best angle for the shore, the ship gave chase and in an hour came up within half a mile, and began to fire her bow chasers, which the brig only answered with a swivel, Capt. Tracy reserving his whole fire, until the ship, keeping a constant fire, came up within Pistol shot upon his lee quarter when the brig gave her the best return they could make from their main and quarter deck guns, swivels and small arms, and after then kept up a constant fire. The ship was soon up along side, and with twelve nine pounders of a side, besides forecastle and quarterdeck guns, and with her marines overlooking the brig as high as her leading blocks, kept a continual fire; after some time the ship hauled her wind so close, which obliged the brig to do the same, that Capt. Tracy was unable to fight his lee guns; upon this he backed under her stern, but the ship, which sailed much faster, and worked as quick, had the advantage, and brought her broadside again upon him, which he could not evade; and in this manner they lay not a hundred feet from each other, yawing to and fro, for an hour and twenty minutes, and privateer's men valiantly maintaining their quarters against such a superior force. About this time, the ships foremast guns beginning to slack fire, Capt. Tracy stacked under her stern, and when clear of the smoke and fire, perceived his rigging to be most shockingly cut, yards flying about without braces, some of his principal sails shot to rags, and half of his men to appearance dying and wounded.

Mr. Main, his first Lieutenant, was among the first wounded, and Mr. Davis, one of the prize masters, fell in the last attack. In this situation they went to work to refit the rigging, and to carry the wounded below, the ship having then taken a broad sheer some way off, and none of her guns bearing; but before they could get their yards to rights, which they zealously tried for in hopes still to get clear of the ship, as they were now nearer in shore, or to part from her under the night, she again came up and renewed the attack, which obliged Capt. Tracy to have recourse to his guns again though he still kept some hands aloft to his rigging; but before the brig had again fired two broad-sides, Captain Tracy received a wound in his right thigh, and in a few minutes he could not stand; he laid himself over the arm chest and barricadoe, determined to keep up the fire, but in a short time, from pain and loss of blood, he was unable to command, growing faint, and they helped him below; as soon as he came to, he found his firing had ceased, and his people round him wounded, and not having a surgeon with them, in a most distressed situation, most of them groaning and some expiring.

Struck severely with such a spectacle, Capt. Tracy ordered his people to take him up in a chair upon the quarter deck, and resolved again to attack the ship, which was all this time keeping up her fire; but after getting into the air, he was again so faint that he was for sometime unable to speak, and finding no alternative, but they must be taken or sunk, for the sake of the brave men that remained, he ordered them to strike to the ship [Milford, of twenty-eight guns, John Burr, commander]. Thus was this action maintained upwards of two hours in a low single decked vessel, with not half the metal the ship had, against an English frigate, whose navy had been the dread of nations, and by a quarter the number of people in the one as the other, yet the victors exulted as though they had overcome a force as much superior as this was inferior to them. The brig had four men killed and thirteen wounded including officers the number in the Milford wounded is not known, though there were some. The deprivation of these brave officers and men is to be regretted by all friends to this country. With justice to Captain Bur of the Milford, it must be acknowledged he treated with humanity and politeness the officers and men that were wounded; but to the eternal disgrace of Britain, and the present King and Parliament, let it be recorded, that in this very action above related, upwards of thirty Americans (prisoners in the Milford) were forced, at the forfeit of their lives, to fight against their countrymen, and the officers and men of the Yankey Hero, that were not wounded, are now detained in several of their ships, and may meet with the same cruel fate, an exaction that even savages have not been known to require. It is to the credit of the Hero's men, that not one would enter upon the ship's books, though not only urged by every persuasion but by threats.

Capt. James Tracy, and Mr. Main his first Lieutenant, we hear are likely to do well of their wounds, though they mend but slowly; they and the other wounded men are at Halifax, twelve of the Hero's men were kept on board the Milford. Mr. Robert Tracy, his second Lieutenant, and the rest of the brig's company, are on board the Renown, Commodore [Francis] Banks.

Joseph Palmer represents, That the Town of Braintree was heretofore Supported in a great measure by Supplying Lumber for Ship-building, & large quantities of Stones for Cellars, Houses & Wharfs, for Boston, Marblehead &c, which employed many men, & about 10 or 12 Lighters from 25 to 40 Tons each; which business has been wholly destroyed by the Quarel commenced against us by Great-Britain: said Palmer had also there, a very large Manufac[to]r[y] of Spermaceti Candles, which is entirely Stoped, & the Apparatus nearly, if not quite ruined, to his damage more than £2000 L mo within that Town

That some of the Inhabitants were obliged to quit their habitations, others removed their most valuable effects, & many Suffered great damage by having troops Stationed upon the Sea-Coasts of said Town, to prevent greater damage by the Enemy; whose vicinity occasioned frequent alarms to the Inhabitants.

Petition of William Jenkins to the Massachusetts Council[1]

State of the Massachusetts Bay } To the Honble the Council and the Honble the House of Representatives of said State in General Court assembled at Watertown this twelfth Day of September 1776

Humbly sheweth William Jenkins of the City of Bristol in the Kingdom of Great Britain, Mariner.

That your Petitioner being Master of the Brigantine called the Perkins, was by the Chance of War, taken by the Capts [Samuel] Tucker and [John] Skimmer in the Continental arm'd Schooners called the Hancock and Franklin & brought into the Port of Boston where he now is —

Your Petitioner would represent to the Honble Court that at the time of his being taken, he was on a Merchant Voyage, bound from St Augustine to Bristol in Great Britain, that he had on Board his said Brigantine no Supplies of any kind either for the Fleet or Army, now employed against these States, neither had he Arms or Ammunition —

Your Petitioner would further represent to the Honble Court, that he left in Bristol a Wife and four small Children who are entirely dependant on him for their Support and maintenance, & he is really apprehensive that even before this time they may be suffering all the Anxiety and Distress annexed to a Want of the Necessaries & Comforts of Life, unless fortunate enough to find Friends to releive them in their Troubles; however tedious and irksome his Continuance here might otherwise be, this cannot but necessarily render it more so. He therefore prays the Honble Court that from a Consideration of the Premisses, they would grant him Permission to take Passage for Great Britain or any other Part of Europe, the first Opportunity that offers; he also prays Liberty to take with him his Servant Boy.

He humbly presumes there will be no Objection to the Prayer of his Petition, as he is not held as a Prisoner of War, & no Information that he can give can be of any possible Service or disservice to either Party in this War, unless indeed the Humanity with which he has been treated may be an Inducement to the like Treatment of others in similar Circumstances on the other Side — And as in Duty bound shall ever pray

Will[m] Jenkins

[Endorsed] In Council Sept 20th 1776 Read & Ordered that the Prayer of this Petition be granted & Said Petitioner be permitted to depart with his Servant Boy to any Part of Great Brittain agreeable to his Prayer –[2]

An authentic List of the Naval and Military Force, in the Province of Nova-Scotia, August 13th, 1776, collected from the best Authorities in said Province.

In the Harbour of Halifax, the Milford and Liverpool Frigates, of 28 guns; the Brig Hope, of 12 Guns; the new Sloop of War, fitting out, called the Albany (late the Rittenhouse, belonging to Philadelphia) to carry 16 Guns, Mowatt, Commander.

August 16. Since writing this List, the Milford and Liverpool Frigates sailed, and the 17th, the Brig Hope will sail for Louisburg [And since which (by an honest Fisherman) we are informed, that the Milford Frigate is cruising off this Coast again. Look out, Cruizers,&c.][1]

Captain James Tracey, and Lieut. Mains, of the Yankee Hero Brig, were sent from Halifax to Staten-Island, the last of July, on board the Mercury pirate Frigate, James Montague – [Captain Proctor, of Philadelphia, who is now a prisoner in Halifax goal, was 11 weeks in irons on board the above Frigate, during which time he was treated in the most barbarous manner by the above Montague, who several times threatened to hang him, and offered one of his sailors 40s. to swear his life against him.] Mr. Carpenter, of this Town, is closely confined in irons in Halifax goal, by order of Gen. We learn from undoubted authority, that the Schooner Sally, Capt. Roach, which lately went from Piscataqua, to Halifax, as a flag of truce, with prisoners, was, on her arrival there, made a prize of, (by that petty, paltry, Jack-tarr, Commodore Arbuthnot,) and the hands put on board a man of war.

Yesterday se'nnight was sent into this Harbour, by the Lee, Capt. Waters, a Sloop from the Eastward, bound for Halifax, laden with Cord-Wood.[2]

We hear that a Snow, laden with Rum, and Sugars, was carried into Cape-Ann last Week.[3]

One Day last Week, was sent into Providence, seven Vessels, Prizes, with Supplies for those unrelenting, barbarous, tyrannical, blood-thirsty Butchers, the Royal Savage of Britain's Troops, now on Staten-Island. — They were taken by the Captains Biddle and Whipple, in two Vessels of War, belonging to the United and Confederated States of America. Particulars of their Cargoes have not yet come to Hand.

Last Sunday was taken and carried into Gouldsborough, by two small Boats, a Brig from Ireland, bound for Halifax, laden with Beef, Butter, &c. She parted Company with Twelve other Provision Vessels the Day on which she was taken, all bound for the above Port.

By the Hartford Post we are informed, that the Royal pirate Frigate Rose, commanded by the infamous Wallace, in attempting to get up the Sound, at New-York, was hulled several Times, and obliged to put back to the ministerial fleet.

1. The brackets were inserted by the printer of the Chronicle. Apparently he had taken the Halifax material from a letter or the Nova-Scotia Gazette, and interpolated his own comments.

We hear a Privateer from Salem has taken a Brigantine from Cork, loaded with provisions for New-York, and sent her into some Port at the eastward.

MAJOR GENERAL HORATIO GATES TO BRIGADIER GENERAL BENEDICT ARNOLD [1]

Dear General. Tyonderoga 12th September 1776.

I had the Pleasure to receive your Letters by Lieutenant [John] Brooks of the 6th Battallion of Pensilvanians, from Isle-aux-Mottes. I am perfectly satisfied with your leaving Isle-aux-Tites, & think from Your's & every other Account, that the Post you now Occupy is much preferable. Point-aux Fers is an Object that should employ your Serious Attention. Should it be Possible for the Enemy Secretly to get Artillery, & a post Fix'd there, while you are to the Northward of that remarkable Spot, it might prove a great Annoyance to your Fleet, remember how exceedingly you ought to Guard against the possibility of the Enemy's possessing any Narrow Pass in your Rear; a Caution, which you so-much approved, in the Orders, & Instructions you received.

The Row Gallies are all three at this Place, and Fitting with the Utmost diligence. Gl Waterbury is indefatigable, & promises to Sail without the smallest unnecessary Delay; your best Pilot should be sent by the return of The Bearer to Conduct them down. — You wrote to General Schuyler, to Apply to Governour Trumbull for Capts to Command These Gallies. The Governour has sent Four; by this, we are incumber'd with Double Officers, as you appointed Three, before you left Tyonderoga. What is best to be done in this Difficulty? I shall Endeavour to Pacify all Claimants, until I hear from You. a Good many Seamen are procured, & will be sent in the Gallies. I have Order'd Commissary [Elisha] Avery, & Mr Deacon Rood of Onion River, to Acquaint all the Inhabitants upon both sides the Lake, that what Cattle, Sheep, Garden Stuff, or Hoggs, are sent to You, shall; upon your Certificate, be paid for in ready money, upon the presentment thereof to Me.

Inclosed is a Copy of a Letter I have Just receivd from Dr Franklin. The Tobacco is not yet come, it shall be sent to you in the First Row Galley — would it not, now & then be proper for a Row Galley or Gondola to Cruize a little to the Southward, above Point Aux Fers, to protect boats &c passing to the Fleet? — The Enemy are Subtile, and quick at Expedients; they may endeavour to Impose False Friends upon you; your watch word, should never be given until Sun Sett, and all boats, at Day light, kept at a proper Distance, until their Crews are examined.

In Obedience to your request I wrote very fully Yesterday in my Publick Letter upon the Subject you so Earnestly mention'd. I fancy when my letter is received, the Congress, & your Friends will be convinced, that every report to your prejudice is Founded in Calumny, & should meet with the Contempt, & disregard it so Justly deserves.

A Fourth Row Galley will be quite plank'd up by Saturday night; your Barge is here, and most elegantly painted & Finish'd. She will be sent by Capt [James] Arnold; The prvovisions I now send, will last much longer than will be necessary for the Supply of the Fleet, until the First Row Galley Arrives, Even if the Inhabitants upon the Lake do not send you any Fresh Provisions &c.

I hope to be able to send all the Cloathing you demand by Capn Arnold. Rum goes by this Conveyance, and all the Hard bread baked at Crown Point. — Commissary Avery has my orders to write, & to Obey all your Orders. — the Swivels will come with the Galley; Gunners are very Scarce; but you Shall be Supplied.

I would Feign send you some Intelligence from Authority, of the Proceedings of The Armies at Long Island; but neither General Sch[uyler] or myself, have received any Letters from General Washn; that are particular upon the Subject. By private Letters, it is clear the Enemy lost upwards of 1400 Men in the three Repulses they met with, in their Attack upon our Lines, Wednesday the 28th Ult; and Commissary Trumbull writes that we are still in possession of Our Lines upon Long Island, and the City of New York. It is beyond a doubt that our people have behaved with the Greatest Spirit & that the Enemy have suffer'd Greatly & must View our Troops in a very respectable light I am [&c.]

P S When you receive an Order to send a Flag to the Enemy; or have an Opportunity by the return of one of theirs, send them the Act of Independence Inclosed —

Journal of Ambrose Serle[1]

[On board H. M. S. Eagle] Thursday, 12th. Septr.

A severe Canonade was heard on board this Morning, supposed to be Horn's Hook, where our People are dislodging the Rebels, and are already in Possession of two Islands [Montresor's and Buchanan's] near the Isle of York Shore. We have lost one Sailor, who was killed as he lay sleeping on the Grass by a Cannon Ball. An Engineer lost an Arm; and two or three other slight Accidents occurred.

This Afternoon Capt. [Thomas] Wilkinson in the Pearl, a fine Frigate of 32 Guns, arrived from Quebec. He brought us very agreeable News from Genl. Carleton, viz. That General Burgoyne was almost ready to embark on Lake Champlain, and probably would be embarked by the middle of August, with an Army of about 14,000 Men, of which 10,000 were Regulars and about 1000 Indians; and that, if it were necessary, he could bring with him 15 or 20,000 Canadians. Capt. Wilkinson convoyed several Transports with upwards of 500 Rebel Prisoners on board, with whom we know not what to do. He also informed us, that he spoke with a Ship on the 27th. of July, who had seen the Second Division of the Hessians at Sea, and that they may hourly be expected to arrive.

Robert Morris to Silas Deane[1]

[Extract] Philada Septr 12th 1776

Sir You will receive herewith Copy of what I wrote you the 11th Ulto & by this Conveyance I remit the 2d bills of those setts mentioned in that letter. I have bought a considerable quantity of Tobacco but cannot get suitable Vessells to carry it, you cannot conceive the many disapointments we have met with in this Respect however I expect a Ship is now taking in about 400 hhds as I wrote two posts ago agreeing to the Owners terms and shall advi[s]e you more particularly in my next respecting this matter. I am sorry to tell you another Vessell bound from hence for Bourdeaux with a Cargo of flour &c has been taken and carried to N York with the Fleet. this was a fine New Brigt intended as a Packet between us. she had dispatches for You which were thrown over board & sunk by the Captain as well the Invoices &c of the Cargo,[2] these unlucky accidents retard the remittances exceedingly, which is vexatious but cannot be helped. I hope your Credit has been sufficient to procure the Indn Goods & that they are on their way out, for they will be much wanted and we shall not give over remitting untill you are fully enabled to pay for them; I expect a Cargo of Rice & Indigo is now Shipping on this Account as orders have been given to that Effect, but still the same difficulty about Vessells occurrs in that quarter also. So many of the American Ships have been taken, lost, sold & employ[ed] abroad, that they are now very Scarce in every part of the Continent which I consider as a great misfortune for Ship building does not go on as formerly and this Want can only be supply'd by the arrival of Ships from Europe and by the Captures, in which all the American Cruizers have been remarkably Successful those who have engaged in Privateering are making Large Fortunes in a most Rapid manner, I have not meddled in this bussiness which I confess does not square with my Principles for I have long had extensive Connections & dealings with many Worthy Men in England & Coud not consent to take any part of their property because the Government have Seized mine, which is the case in several instances.

The Trading plan recommended in my last is farr more eligible and if we have but luck in getting the Goods safe to America the Proffits will be sufficient to Content us all, I do therefore continue my recommendation of that plan and sincerely hope You & Tom[3] will be able to do something considerable therein for you may depend it will reward you beyond any other pursuit. If you can procure Insurance at any reasonable prem[iu]m even at 50 pCt (altho I dont think the Risque is really worth 15 pCt) I think you had best to Charter two or three good Double Deck'd fast Sailing Vessells, ballast or Load them with Salt in the Holds and put onboard of each as many Dry Goods, say Woolens, Linens, Tin, Copper, Hosiery &c &c, as you can Conveniently obtain & let them proceed immediately for this place, Insuring the Value of the Cargoes on the best terms you can against the Risque of Capture by our Enemies as well as against all other Risques & dangers, I mean that you shou'd Charter French Vessells & by clearing them out for the Island of St Piers & Miquelon they may sail along this Coast without being Subject to Capture untill they come within three Leagues of the Land, you must take care that the Ships are sound, strong & staunch and that they are well fitted & Manned, two suits of Sails and good Anchors & Cables they ought to have. tell the Masters when they come on this Coast to venture in Close with the Land as our N Westers in the Winter will keep them out a long time if they keep without Or in the Gulph Stream whereas if they come within it, nothing but an Easterly Wind can hurt them & those Winds do not prevail much in Winter, when they come in sight of our Light House they must hoist an Ensign at the Foretop Gallt Mast head and stand in for the Mouth of the Bay with it flying. If there is any Enemy or danger in the way, a Signal will be made at the Light House by shewing Colours there. If no danger they will not answer the Signal and the Vessells may come boldly in to the Mouth of the Bay or into Whore Kiln Road & send a Boat onshoar at Lewis Town for a Pilot – inshort I think there is very little danger in all this matter for the Men of Warr cannot keep the Coast & we will not let them Harbour here in the Winter Season. You Shou'd Charter the Vessells out here & back again, so that You may afford them a good Freight & we will load them back with Wheat, flour, Tobacco, Rice & Indigo, Bees Wax &c, to pay for the Cost of the Cargoes You Ship by them, besides these Vessells I wou'd have you keep sending out Goods Constantly to Martinico, St Eustatia & Cape Francois but the first and last are safest for the present & I suppose will continue so, unless the French become parties in our Warr which I think very likely and then the Dutch Islands must engross our Attention, at St Eustatia Mr Cornelius Stevenson and at Curracoa Mr Isaac Governeur will receive & forward Goods for us, at Cape Francois Mr Stephen Ceronia, at St Nicholas Mole Mr John Dupuy, at Martinico Wm Bingham Esqr who has already written you some Letters & with whom I expect you will support a Constant Correspondence both Political & Commercial, he is a Young Gentl[eman] of good Education, Family & Fortune, his Correspondence has yet a good deal of the Fancifull Young Man in it, but experience will cure him of this and upon the whole I think he had abilitys of Merit both in the Political & Commercial Line, you will inform him soon as You can whether Insurance can be effected on Goods & Vessells from the French Islands to this Continent, and on what terms, indeed we expect to hear from You pretty regularly through that Channell

Robert Morris.

Since my last Genl Howe & his Army have taken possession of Long Island leaving about 4 or 5000 Men on Staten Island where they first landed We had some Works & about 5000 Men on Long Isld when the Enemy landed with 20 m a Skirmish very soon followed the landing there about 3000 of our Men went out of the Lines to take possession of some Hills & high Lands, but the Enemy out General'd us and surrounded our People with four times their Number however they purchased the honor of the day at a very dear rate for our Folks drew up, gave them Battle & two different times broke & routed double their Number in fair Manouvering & Platoon firing in the open Field, but in the end Superiour Numbers & Superiour Generalship prevailed, We lost about 7 to 800 Men in Killed, Wounded & Prisoners, the Enemies loss was farr greater as they acknowledge in Killed & Wounded, but not so in Prisoners for we only took one party a Lieutt & 30 Men. Sullivan commanded in this affair & was well seconded by Ld Stirling who behaved Nobly indeed, they are both Prisoners as are several Cls Lt Cols & other officers, in short such Victorys as these alarm our Enemies & will be their ruin. We have evacuated Long Island & must do the same by N York which is not tenable against their Ships, for my part I wish our Men & Stores were all removed to Kingsbridge where we must sooner or later take Post & make the great stand. We are no ways dismayed at the Force of the Enemy but have full hopes of getting the better of them in the long run altho they seem very formidable at present Our Army on the Lakes is now very Strong and we seem perfectly Secure in that quarter for the present. . .

MARYLAND COUNCIL OF SAFETY TO VAN BEBBER AND HARRISON, ST. EUSTATIUS[1]

Gentlemen,

Your favours of the 9th 24th and 25 of July and August 1st & 15th are before us. – It has been unlucky for this State as well as for you, that so many of our outward bound Vessells have miscarried – we have been tolerabl luckey in our importations, having only lost the Adventures by Scott and Simmerton that we as yet hear of, Captain Luce is safe arrived in Deleware and we Daily expect to hear of the arrival of the rest of the Powder you advise us, that you have and are about to Ship. – We are very solicitous to Charter or buy Vessells to Load out to your address as we want a large sum of Money in your hands for the Purchase of Salt, Arms, Course Cloathes, Blankets and Lead but we fear that we shall be disappointed in procuring as many as we want – you will therefore if possible Charter or buy Vessells with you and Load them in with Salt as far as thirty thousand Bushels and Draw Bills upon us or upon Messrs Willing Morris and Company at Philadelphia and you may depend upon their being duly honoured. Next to Salt we want a large quantity of Course Cloths, Blankets, Sail Duck light as well as heavy, Lead and Muskets. – We do not restrict you in price – but leave it to you to do the best you can for the State of Maryland – and your Bills for the whole or any part thereof will be paid.

P.S. Your Bill on T. Johnson Esqr Will be duely honoured – We are &c:[2]

Colonel Thomas Crafts to the Massachusetts Council[1]

Some time in June last a Scotch Ship & brig were seen in the bay by the troops stationed at Hull, standing in for the Light & four Privateers attacking them without any probable hopes of success. On this ordered one eighteen pounder to Point Alderton In the dusk of the evening The Vessels were between said Point & the fort on Hull – We fired from the Fort on them – The brig struck to us & sent her boat on shore. I put in a claim for the Vessels in the name of the State & in behalf of myself & regiment – But recovered no part of the Ship or brig.[2] When the Queen of England was taken I had the same idea of the matter as before –[3] That it was my duty to claim for the State as well as myself & Regiment, accordingly gave directions to my Council – I was afterward to my great surprize informed, that the Ship was not libelled in the name of the State & that it was too late to correct this error – But at my request the Honble Mr [Richard] Derby [Jr.] Agent for the State had leave to enter his claim, the time by Law for his doing it being relapsed notwithstanding for I had no disposition that the State should be deprived of its just right in this Vessel neither have I now any disposition to contend if the Council are clearly of the opinion that there ought to be a different disposition of said Ship & Cargo from that given by the Court & Jury I beg your Honors would excuse my troubling you with this matter & believe me to be with the greatest respect [&c.]

JAMES BOWDOIN TO JOHN HANCOCK[1]

Sir. [Watertown] Septr 13th 1776.

The General Assembly of this State beg leave to inform the Honble Congress, that the Milford Frigate of 28 Guns and another Ship of War, have been for sometime cruising on this Coast, and have taken several Merchantmen and valuable prizes coming into Port; We have apply'd to the Honble Thos Cushing & John Langdon Esqrs, Agents for building the Continental Ships at Newbury Port & Portsmouth, requesting that one or more of those ships might be sent out to protect our Coast, but are inform'd by those Gentlemen that they have no Guns, and if they had, they have no orders to send the Ships to Sea, upon this information the General Assembly of this State resolv'd to furnish the Agent for building the Continental Ships at Newbury Port with a sufficient number of Guns for one of them, and afford him every other assistance in their power in fitting out and manning said Ship; provided leave can be obtain'd from the Honble Congress for said Vessell to cruise on this Coast for the protection of the Trade thereof, The Agent engaging to reimburse all the Expences this State shall incur in fitting out and manning said Ship, and return said Guns whenever said Ship shall be otherwise employ'd.

We would farther inform the Hon Congress that the Guns propos'd for the above purpose are 24 nine pounders, which we apprehend are suitable for the Ship under the command of Hector McNeil Esqr, and which is in the greatest forwardness for sailing.[2]

As said Ship will be inferior to the Enemy in Force, this state beg leave to suggest to the Honble Congress, the great advantage of having the Ship under the care of John Langdon Esqr fitted out immediately to act in concert with her. The readiness of the State of New Hampshire to give all possible assistance to Mr Langdon for the above purpose, will appear by a resolve of that State herewith inclos'd.

JAMES BOWDOIN TO THE RHODE ISLAND NAVAL COMMITTEE[1]

Gentn Watertown Septr 13th 1776

We have your Letter of the 29th Ulto and consider the sending out the Continental Ships (as you do) of the greatest consequence to these united States, and should be glad to promote their being sent out immediately by every means in our power, for we trust they might be employ'd to very good purposes, especially as several of the Enemies Cruizers are now infesting this Coast.

We farther assure You that we shall readily embrace such occasions as may present to render a neighbouring State any reasonable Services, but considering how much this State is drained of its Men by the public Calls, and how much our Sea Coast is expos'd to the incursions of the Enemy, we have thought it needful sometime since to pass a Resolve prohibiting the inlisting our Sea Coast men into any other Service, even such as it may concern this State particularly to attend to; we cannot therefore consent to your request that Mr [John] Grannis may be permitted to enlist his Compliment of Marines out of the Troops in our pay.

If Mr Grannis chuses another Service in preference to ours, we shall endeavour to supply his place by as good a Man.[2]

Capt. [Robert] Fanshaw, and the Roebuck of 44 Guns, Capt. Hammond, sailed up the East River up to Bushwyck Bay. The Fort fired 4 or 5 Guns faintly upon them, as also a Battery upon a red Bank of high Land just above the Town; and were retorted upon very warmly by our Batteries on Governor's Island & Brookland. The Ships passed along under their Top-sails, for the most Part; and, in supreme Contempt of the Rebels and their Works, did not fire a Gun. It was a fine Sight, if one could have divested one's Thoughts of the melancholy Reflection, that some Fellow-Creatures Lives were either taking away or in Danger, on account of the Villainy of the Rebel Leaders & Abettors. We could not perceive that the Ships recd. the least Damage; by an account afterwards, we found that the Phoenix had one man killed upon her Forecastle.

> . . . The 21st, about three o'clock in the afternoon, his Lordship made the signal for us to weigh, in company with the Phoenix, Roebuck, Carysfort and Rose, with a very light air from the westward. At half past three the enemy's batteries opened and commenced a prodigious heavy cannonade on us, from which we were never a pistol shot till seven o'clock, and without once returning the fire; and though the shot went through and through us, we experienced little loss except in our rigging, which was terribly cut fore and aft, the people being all directed to lie down. The other ships were not so fortunate, having a number killed; among which was Mr. Hitchcock of the Roebuck, belonging to Falmouth who was to have dined with me on that day had not the service prevented it. We anchored in Kippes Bay at half-past seven, where the rebels were intrenched along the shore of York Island two miles, to the number of 15,000, and amused us all night with a constant fire from an eighteen-pounder, with which, from the darkness of the night or bad conduct, they only hit us twice.

[Williamsburg] September 13th 1776

The Board, now resumed the Consideration of the Report made yesterday by the Navy Board; which is as follows viz.

The Commissioners of the Navy are of Opinion, that the Scheme proposed to them by the Council for the Importation of Salt, Clothing, and Medicines, for the supply of the Army, is practicable, and may probably be the means of providing those and many other Articles Indispensably necessary for the Army and Navy on much cheaper Terms, than they can be procured in any other way. They think the following Cruizers to wit, the Sloops Congress, Scorpion, Liberty, Defiance, and Schooners Hornett, and Revenge, may with propriety be spared for the purpose; and that they may be ready to take in their Cargoes by the 15th of October next. They have no doubt the Articles desired may be got in Europe on good Terms, but conceive these Vessels to be unfit for such a voyage; more especially, as their return, would probably happen in the winter season; they have therefore agreeable to the Request of the Council made out Invoices of the Cargoes that they Judge best suited to the Markets in the Foreign West Indies, and a Memorandum of such articles, suited to our wants, as may probably be purchased there to advantage.

Invoice of Cargoes for Six Vessels proposed to be sent to the Foreign West Indies on account of the Public viz.

PURDIE'S Virginia Gazette, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1776

Williamsburg, Sept. 13.

Another vessel is arrived at Hampton with 1400 bushels of Salt, and a small quantity of rum. The captain informs, that he spoke a French ship, one of a fleet of 14 sail, Laden with goods, and bound for Delaware. A number of French officers were likewise on board, who intended to offer their services to the United States of America.

By letters from Cape Nichola Mole, of the 28th ult. we learn that two frigates had lately arrived at St. Domingo, from France, completely manned, in order to cruise off that island, and protect all American vessels within their limits. Two more frigates are daily expected, for the same purpose. These four frigates are to act in conjunction, with two Spanish frigates, which are stationed at Porto Rico, for the protection of all North American vessels. The Spanish captains are to pay equal attention to the general of St. Domingo's orders as to those of the commander at Porto Rico. There is every appearance of a speedy rupture between France, Spain, and Great Britain, as Spain and Portugal are absolutely now at war.

. . . this Opportunity will serve for me to apprize you that if you will lay your Shoulders to Business, We may have it in our Power to do a great deal with very little Risque — the Plan I propose is this to Charter every Vessell that you can come across, load them entirely with Salt and send them into me and I will load them in return with Produce, by this method You will observe the Salt Cargoes will be but little Risque and if the Vessel or Vessels arrive safe here We can afford to run the Risque of the Cargoes to the West Indies; In good Times, the very highest Freight that was given was a Dollar Pr Ton — We can afford now to give Two Dollars Pr Ton, as they will have so many Risques to run and for which a Double Freight will be a full Consideration — By your taking a Trip thro the English Islands, I take it for Granted that You may pick up any Number on those terms, as well as in the Foreign Islands — and it will be necessary to take out English Clearances, with English Bottoms, for Hallifax or St Augustine, which will protect them from the Kings Ships, at the same time it will be as necessary to take out Foreign Clearances, to protect them from Seizure by American Vessels tho' I should in Case of Seizure be able to explain this Matter on the Continent in such a Manner as to give Satisfaction . . .

The Governor laid before the Board agreeable to the Minute of Yesterday the Opinion of the Attorney General & another Gentleman of the Law in Answer to the Question then proposed which was, whether he could be justified by the information then Communicated in laying an Embargo at this time on the Shipping bound to the Mississippi which he desired might be read & inserted in the minutes of this day and is as follows —

Sir

In Answer to your Excellencys Question of yesterday whether your Excellency would be Justified by the information then communicated in laying an Embargo at this time on the Shipping bound to the Mississippi, We have the honor of informing your Excellency that there is no doubt but by the known and Established Laws of the Land, the King may and Consequently your Excellency as his representative in this Province can in time of War by Proclamation lay an Embargo on all Shipping as well those of foreigners, as Others, this however is never to be done but in Cases of Great & Urgent Necessity; thus Stands the Law upon the Subject –

And with regard to the legality of the affair under Consideration having Maturely considered the Matters Contained in the information we are with all due deference to your Excellency of Opinion that such information does not contain such legal Matters as is Necessary to Justify such a measure at this Juncture, we are &c.

His Excellency Governor Chester

And desired to know if the Gentlemen of the Board would still advise him to detain the Vessels bound for the Mississippi after having received the above Opinion. –

(The Chief Justice and Mr Livingston a Gentleman of the Law were also desired by His Excellency to give their Opinion who entirely agreed in Sentiment with Mr Wegg and Mr Bay)

some of the Gentlemen begged leave to decline giving an Answer and Others were Still of the same opinion that the Vessels should be detained – Upon which His Excellency read the following Paragraph (to wit) "Gentlemen I must beg leave to be excused from following your advice as the Gentlemen of the Law are of a very different Opinion (to wit) that the Information is not Sufficient to Warrant me to detain those Vessels any longer – I shall therefore give Orders that they may receive their Necessary papers and proceed on their Voyage." –

JOHN LANGDON TO JOSIAH BARTLETT[1]

Dear Sir — Portsmouth 14 Septemr 1776

My absence for sometime past will no doubt plead a sufficient Excuse for my not writeing, and I suppose you'll say that your hurry must do the same on your part, let it be so then, we are on a Ballance. —

I've just return'd from Providence, where I've been after Guns, this is the third time, I've been, (and sent) to contract for Guns, and to endeavour to perswade those Gentlemen, who are employ'd to build the Ships there to lend me the Guns, which were already cast for our Ship, as they could get another sett cast for one of theirs, long before either could go to Sea. They seem'd at first to agree to it, and Voted in their Committee to spare the Guns, but with this proviso that I should contract with the Owners of the Furnace for a sett to be replac'd, and pay them their price, which was the unheard of Sum of One hundred pounds Lawf[ul] Money Pton, all this (however unreasonable it appear'd to me) I agreed to do, rather than not have the Guns, but notwithstanding this, when I came to see the Contract of the Owners of the Furnace (who by the way are included in this Committee of Mr [Stephen] Hopkins's for building the Ships) it appear'd such a one that I could not in Honour to the States, as Agent sign it, they (some of them especially the Messrs Brown's) declined taking me as Agent, but insisted that I should give my private Engagement to pay for the Guns at that price. I told them that my power was ample and equal to Govr Hopkinss who appointed them to build their Ships & contract for Cannon, they answered, that they did not doubt it, but said the Congress might think the price too high, and perhaps some dispute would arise. I even agreed to do this and in short any thing almost, that they in such an unreasonable manner asked, but what finally prevented my agreeing at last was that they insisted that I should pay one half down for those Guns, which they were to deliver me, which already had been paid for by the Continent, or should pay Intrest for the Money from the delivery of the Guns. — I told them if they would deliver the Guns, I would on my return home, send them Two or three thousand Dollars, and as soon as I could get Money from Philadelphia would pay the whole, as the Continent, would not pay Intrest, and this would be done long before the Guns would be cast for me, with which I was to replace those they lent me, which were not theirs, but the Continent's, such & many more, were the Arguments with those Gentlemen, to induce them to do no more than what I conceive was their duty, but all would not do, there seem'd to be a secret determination not to let me have the Guns at any rate whatever, unless an absolute Order from the Honbl Marine Committee, it appear'd to me, every advantage was to be taken of the Continent in their power, in the Price of Cannon. —

I've given great dispatch for Masts for both of their Ships at Providence, part of which had got round & they have just began to make them, the rest are on their way — take the Situation of their Ships, it appears to me impossible, that they should get to Sea in two or three Months, notwithstanding they tell the Committee they are almost already, and shall want their Guns – It is truly to be lamented, that there should be Guns belonging to the Continent laying at Providence near three or four Months past, and this Ship entirely waiting for them since June last, at which Time every Man might have been had for her, who are now gone either in the Army or Privateering, and the Ship might have Sail'd by the 1st of July without the least doubt, since which she might have taken more Prizes than would have paid for our whole Fleet, numbers of which have been within sight of this Harbour, and all this must be put up with, rather than the Furnace Owners (who are of the Committee and understand one another) should loose Ten or Twenty Pounds P Ton on casting the Guns for the Continent, or a Jealousy that the New Hampshire Frigate, would be ready about four Months before them at Providence – I should been very happy, if the Honourable Committee, had sent a Man, well acquainted with Ships to have seen who was forwardest, how built and the Properest place for that Business – Those Ships at Providence in all probability, could not have gone to Sea, either of them this Year, had they not got Masts from hence unless they had gone with improper ones, not by any means to be depended on.

I think it my duty as Agent, to lay this matter before the Honble Committee, as I tho't the Continent ill treated & myself insulted, by their dragging me at the Continental Expence from this place to Providence, twice or three times under pretence of contracting for Cannon, when I was first up in June, they said Seventy pounds would be the price, little after Eighty pounds, soon after Ninety Pounds, and now by their Letter before my going up, the last time, One Hundred Pounds p Ton, upon which I went up least it should be Two hundred pounds p Ton – They have cast considerable number of Cannon for private Ships, thro the Summer, some of which are Nine Pounders – with great Respect I am [&c.]

[On board H. M. S. Eagle] Saturday, 14th. Septr.

Late last Night arrived Capt [Thomas] Jordan in the Galatea of 20 Guns from Plymouth, which Place she left on the 10th. of July. He brought us Advices, that the Hessians were only sailing from England, when he left it, and that, being in heavy-sailing Dutch Transports, we cannot expect their Arrival here for a great while to come, and especially if they come into the Course of the equinoctial Winds, by which they may be probably driven to the West India Islands, and not be able therefore to sail hither before the Spring. He also brought an account, that the Sea to the South-East from hence, & about Bermuda, and to the Lat. of 32°, is greatly infested by American Privateers, who have taken several of our West India merchant men, and that the Rebels are fitting out every Vessel that can sail for that Purpose. This Intelligence was very unpleasant altogether. A few such swift-sailing Ships as the Galatea would soon disperse or destroy these Free-booters; and 'tis presumed they will be employed.

Five Transports sailed up the East River this Evening to join the Man of War, who went up last Night. Many Shot were exchanged upon the Occasion. I saw a House or Part of a House in the Town tumble down, by a Ball from one of our Ships or Batteries. Three men of War were to have passed up the North River at the same time, but were prevented by an accident.
