THE RETURN OF THE MAGNIFICENT THOUSANDS

This is the time of year I used to describe as the annual U-Haul Rodeo, a time when throughout the Carrboro-Chapel Hill metroplex there is a serious influx of vehicles brimming with stuff driven by individuals unfamiliar with the local terrain.

The recommendation from anyone knowledgeable of this annual occurrence is to avoid certain areas at all costs.

Though the differences between times when UNC is in session and out are not as drastic, this area is still heavily influenced by the cycles of academia. Someone studying the annual migration of the peoples of Carolina might note that in early August the many UNC off-campus residents — mainly those in the upper classes, grad students and post-docs — return from vacations, summers off and internships to reclaim their dwellings. Upon securing their belongings, they head almost immediately to the local watering holes to greet other nomads returning to herd life.

In mid-month, the great dwelling places on campus open up and into them flow thousands of the bright young minds of this generation. Each year, nearly 4,000 students, most of them the youngest of the gathering, are new to this area. Traffic on these weekends is bewildering and unless you're carting in a young 'un or delivering food, the dormitory areas are to be avoided at all costs.

Toward the end of the month, the worlds of higher education and K-12 converge as local schools open and university classes gear up. It is also custom at this time for street repairs on one or two main arteries to suddenly become necessary, a fact that we're sure has nothing to do with the high percentage of State and Clemson grads charged with overseeing DOT projects.

Whether you are among the new members to our community or a fixture, August is one of the best months of the year to explore what we have to offer in music and the arts.

Welcome back.

Call For Submissions

The Carrboro Citizen is seeking fiction and creative nonfiction works for a new series in MILL, our monthly arts, music and literature magazine. Submissions should be sent in digital format and be roughly 500 words in length. Please include a short biographical note and, if possible, a photo of yourself. Though there is no monetary compensation, a handsome basket of gift certificates and candy will be presented to writers chosen for the series.

Send all works to editor@carrborocitizen.com

MORE THAN A MYTH

Their exploits have been passed from from generation to generation of Triangle merchants, organizations and artists, many of whom were saved from a life of poverty and destitution by this selfless gang of do-gooders who provide the cheapest and most effective advertising in the land. All but a few know that to see their posters and flyers posted neatly on bulletin boards all over Chapel Hill, Durham and Raleigh they merely need to call (919) 967-1245 and bring their posters to the Skylight Exchange at 405 West Rosemary Street and leave them in the cabinet by the door. They know that it costs $50 per 100 posters for 100 posters in each town and that you need to leave them by Saturday to have them up for the coming week. They also know musicians and non-profits pay half-price.

KALISHER GALLERY

BY JORDAN TIMPY

The 2nd Friday Artwalk will be a little longer in August with the addition of a new photography gallery in downtown Carrboro. The Jesse Kalisher Gallery now occupies the space at 209 E. Main St., between Scooters Inc. and Harper Arts, across the street from Cat's Cradle.

The gallery showcases the work of photographer Jesse Kalisher, whose black-and-white, fine-art photography can be found anywhere from big-name hotels to permanent collections in museums including the deYoung Fine Arts Museum of San Francisco, the Oakland Museum of California and Ackland Art Museum, to name a few.

Kalisher was introduced to the art of photography at a young age, working closely with his father, the celebrated photographer Simpson Kalisher. However, when it came time for Jesse to choose a college and a career path, he parted ways with his camera.

"It was like we were friends that went our separate ways," said Kalisher, who went on to have a decade-long career in advertising, but realized in 1995 that it was time for him to do something else, although he had no idea what that was.

"I had a backpack and a point-and-shoot camera that I bought for 100 bucks, and I started traveling," said Kalisher, who chose Vietnam as his first destination.

"I really had no intention of being a photographer or doing anything other than taking some snapshots to record my vacation," Kalisher said, "but when I started taking pictures the camera and I rediscovered each other, and it was a very enjoyable reunion."

Kalisher returned to San Francisco after spending two months in Southeast Asia with a reinvigorated passion and began a series of photography projects, including a series of black-and-white landscape images from around San Francisco and a project called "Indivisible," a collection of portraits of Americans combined with text from interviews about race relations in America.

When Kalisher's wife became pregnant, they began looking for a place to open a gallery.

"We just opened up a map of the United States and said, 'Where do we want to live?'" Kalisher recalled, "and we discovered the two towns of Carrboro and Chapel Hill."

In late 2003, Kalisher moved with his family to Chapel Hill, close to the Carrboro border, and has since developed a great affection for both places, but especially for the more community-oriented Carrboro, which was an impetus for choosing the location to open a gallery.

"The sense of the arts and the sense of community in Carrboro, for us, is wonderful," Kalisher said, "and we feel very, very lucky to have found this location in the middle of town, right across from The ArtsCenter, and hopefully we will be able to become part of the thriving arts community."

The Jesse Kalisher Gallery will open its doors for the first time Friday, August 8 from 6 to 8 p.m., just in time for the month's 2nd Friday ArtWalk. Jesse Kalisher, his wife, Helen, and the entire gallery staff will be hosting the event and Open Eye Café will provide refreshments. The first exhibit is entitled "Art Watching" and features photographs exploring the interaction between art and people.

DON DIXON

T influential Chapel Hill musician Don Dixon will play two shows this month at Cat's Cradle. Don Dixon & the Jump Rabbits play this Saturday, Aug. 2, and he will appear again Aug. 23 with Arrogance. Dixon was a founding member of Arrogance, an influential and popular band in Chapel Hill in the 1970s, and produced R.E.M.'s 1983 popular debut album, Murmur. Come out and see an original Chapel Hill favorite and one of the men responsible for our rich local music history.
