A Flora reader's pipevine story

following account from Flora reader Nancy Walker: "Thanks to the North Carolina Botanical Garden, we (my gardening partner Maggie Roos-Codsi and I) planted three pipevines at Maggie's house in Bahama two years ago. Little by little, the story of how this plant participates in the 'big picture' was revealed to us. The caterpillars that eat the pipevine leaves become poison feed to unwary predators of the ensuing pipevine swallowtail butterfly. As the predators 'learn' about that protection ... they grant many species of 'dark' butterflies the same 'immunity' from attack, rather than risk the poison."

So we have here an example of mimicry, one of nature's mysterious wonders.

In this case, through countless years of adaptation, some butterfly species have somehow developed color patterns similar to a species succeeding in becoming undesirable as a meal for predators.

Well now, the pipevine, or Dutchman's pipe, Aristolochia macrophylla, is a luxuriantly growing vine of mountain-cove forests. Apparently, it will tolerate our harsh lowland Piedmont growing conditions. I'm always amazed when plants, by nature, restricted to the environmental conditions of the mountains, manage to survive here in our hot and dry Piedmont. The Botanical Garden has had one climbing around in a pawpaw tree for several years.

Rather than the fact that it was the town's official walk and bike to school day, a lovely fall day was the inspiration for the Charney family to ride to McDougle Elementary and back on Wednesday. Mom Amy Charney joined daughters Elisabeth (7) and Julia (8) for the ride. They were helped across Hillsborough Road by crossing guard James Burnette.

New town clerk takes office

CARRBORO – Carrboro swore in its first new town clerk in 38 years at Tuesday night's board of aldermen meeting. Cathy Wilson, a North Carolina native, was appointed to the position by Carrboro town officials on Sept. 8 after Sarah Williamson, Carrboro's town clerk since 1972, announced her retirement. Wilson was chosen from a pool of 105 applicants.

For the past three years, Wilson has served as town clerk for the Town of Kiawah Island, S.C., but she's always remembered Carrboro.

"I remember Carrboro from when I was in middle school and I went to my first Chapel Hill football game," Wilson said. "I just remember its personality from when I was 12 years old, so Carrboro's a place that's always stuck out in my head."

Wilson grew up in Burnsville, about 35 miles northeast of Asheville, and received her bachelor's degree in political science from Appalachian State University. She also holds a master's degree in public administration from the College of Charleston. She is in the process of completing the requirements to be a certified municipal clerk.

Being a town clerk, she said, is a great opportunity.

"It's a good spot to be in, to kind of be in the middle of all of it," Wilson said. "It's a really good spot as far as learning everything you want to know about municipal government, and so as far as just recently finishing my master's to work in local government as a career, this is a good place to start."

New clerk Cathy Wilson

Carrboro residents are looking forward to that start, and some positive change. Lydia Lavelle, a member of the board of aldermen, said that Wilson's upcoming challenges would include learning how to balance her time.

"We have a very engaged citizenry, and she will be called upon frequently by the public for information and to answer questions," Lavelle said. "Balancing her work time between her interactions with town staff, the board of aldermen and the public will be challenging at times, but she will learn how best to manage her time."

County wants utility districts

Areas in western, eastern parts of county considered

BY SUSAN DICKSON Staff Writer

The Orange County Board of Commissioners voted unanimously on Tuesday to take steps toward creating utility districts in areas of the county identified for economic development. The establishment of water and sewer districts would create an authority that could levy taxes from property owners in the district in order to finance the installation of water and sewer lines, which county officials say is imperative to attracting developments and businesses.

'The key to this whole scenario, and really the only reason to pursue it, is to provide the opportunity to put utilities in your economic-development district," County Manager Frank Clifton said. "This is just a vehicle to get you where you have talked about going and a methodology to let you move that process forward.

"Right now, we are totally dependent on other entities," he added.

The county could potentially also use proceeds from the proposed quarter-cent sales tax to be voted on in November's election, to fund the infrastructure. Last month, the commissioners voted to allocate 42.5 percent of funds raised from the tax to economic development.

County officials are eager to explore economic development in Orange County, given that property tax makes up more than 75 percent of the county's total revenue and an increase in businesses in the county could help diversify the tax base.

Brumley Forest to be protected by Conservancy

BY SUSAN DICKSON

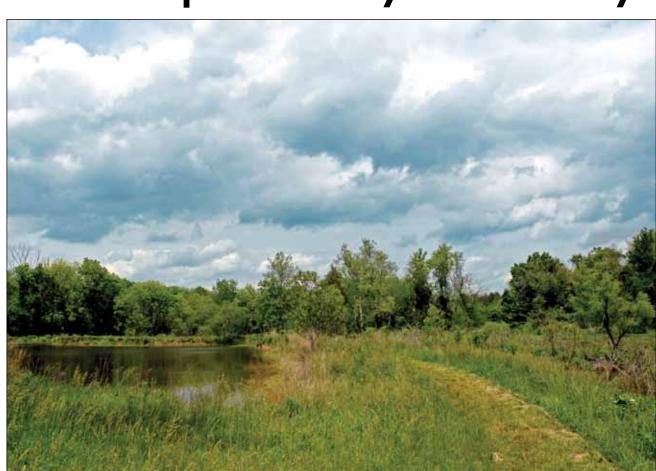

Staff Writer

Less than 20 years ago, a large forest north of Chapel Hill was under consideration to become an 800-homesite development. The property, filled with trees, ponds and wildlife, was to be known as the University Station development and would have housed hundreds, perhaps thousands, of people.

On Monday, that property - now known as Brumley Forest – will instead be dedicated to the memory of George and Julia Brumley and their family as a Triangle Land Conservancy (TLC) nature preserve. The 613-acre property – the second-largest undeveloped parcel of land in Orange County - sits between Chapel Hill and Hillsborough near New Hope Church Road and N.C. 10. In the 1980s, George Brumley III, who lived on 30 acres nearby, worried about the size of the proposed development and decided to do something about it.

Brumley Forest will be preserved by the Triangle Land Conservancy.

SPOTLIGHT: MINUS SOUND

Minus Sound plus art

The Minus Sound Research collective is holding a celebration of its first five years with a special set of shows over two nights at The ArtsCenter, along with a collection of art by local musicians, including Laura Balance, Casey Burns, Viva Cohen, Casey Cook, Laird Dixon, Shirle' Hale, Linc Hancock, Reid Johnson, Ron Liberti, Mac Mc-

Caughn, Nathan Oliver, Wendy Spitzer, Melissa Swingle, Beth Tacular and Michael Triplett.

The opening reception for the art show is 6 to 8 p.m. during the 2nd Friday Artwalk, with a concert to follow by Bird and Arrows, Free Electric State, The Kingsbury Manx and The Moaners.

Saturday night's concert starts at 8:30 p.m. and features Organos, North Elementary, Shark Quest and American in France.

The collective's shows are curated by John Harrison and Maria Albani. As part of the five-year celebration, Harrison and Albani, along with designer Regina McCoy and photographer Erik Anderson, have compiled a book that will be on sale at the shows featuring the collective's artworks and events.

Chapel Hill workers protest suspension

Two Town of Chapel Hill sanitation workers banned from town property while they are under investigation protested with members of several local organizations on Friday in front of Chapel Hill Town Hall.

Solid-waste operators Clyde Clark and Kerry Bigelow were joined by members of UE Local 150, the Chapel Hill-Carrboro NAACP Labor Committee and UNC Student Action with Workers for the protest, which they said would occur weekly until they are allowed to return to work.

According to a release issued by protest organizers, Clark and Bigelow were suspended and banned from town property on Sept. 20, which was one business day after they filed safety and health and other grievances with the town. Clark and Bigelow "have been raising concerns regarding racism, health and safety issues and abusive management," the releaase states.

A letter from the town stated there were complaints about

Clark and Bigelow, according to the release.

Oil spill

The strong smell of oil reported by residents near the intersection of Robert Hunt Drive and North Greensboro Street was traced to a spill from an unused 275-gallon underground storage tank, town officials reported.

Carrboro crews were not able to determine how much oil leaked out the tank; it was flushed out with groundwater. The town expects minimal impact on Bolin Creek and has notified the N.C. Department of Environment and Natural Resources about the spill and its source.

Hillsborough picks chief

The Town of Hillsborough selected Duane Hampton, a lieutenant with the Durham Police Department, as its new chief of police last week.

Hampton will start Nov. 1 and will be paid a salary of $83,100. He replaces former Chief Clarence Birkhead, who

Throughout the selection process, Mr. Hampton demonstrated impressive skill, ability and knowledge in the areas that the community-watch leaders, business leaders, citizens and police department staff identified as critical for making Hillsborough an even safer community," Hillsborough Town Manager Eric Peterson said. "Most importantly, I believe he will support and partner with the talented personnel already in the police department to develop ways to improve the quality of law enforcement services to Hillsborough's citizens.'

Hampton started his career with the Durham Police Department in 1995. He has worked as a patrol officer, corporal, training corporal, investigations sergeant and staff-inspection sergeant. Since January, he has served as the assistant division commander of Criminal Investigations, with responsibility for the operation of homicide, youth, fraud and domestic-violence investigations units and the forensic-services and property and

"I am honored to be selected as Hillsborough's chief of police and look forward to serving and becoming a part of the Hillsborough community," Hampton said. "I plan to make it a priority to get to know the town and the department and be able to hit the ground running."

Quiz time for governments

Members of the Chapel Hill Town Council and the Carrboro Board of Aldermen will match wits tonight (Thursday) at the WCHL Quiz Bowl at The ArtsCenter.

The competition starts at 7 p.m. and will be broadcast live on WCHL-1360 AM. Neither elected body has taken an official position on the trivia contest; however, one member of the board of aldermen asked colleagues if they were ready to "kick some Chapel Hill butt" shortly before the board adjourned its Tuesday night meeting.

Board wants input on northern commercial plan

BY KIRK ROSS

Staff Writer

— What started as CARRBORO an update on a design workshop for a possible commercial space north of Carrboro turned into a fullfledged discussion on the potential for commercial development north of Homestead Road in a Carrboro Board of Aldermen meeting Tuesday night at Town Hall.

The board discussed a proposed workshop for a 31-acre parcel on

Eubanks Road owned by Parker Louis LLC, one of five property-owner groups asked by the town to consider joining in a workshop with neighbors, developers and other stakeholders to gain feedback about potential mixed-use developments.

The town and its recent North Transition Area Plan Implementation Review Committee identified several areas north of town that have potential for commercial space. The board of aldermen indicated in 2008 that the town would consider increasing the allowable density in some areas if commercial space was a part of the project. Later this month, the board will continue a public hearing on a proposal to do just that. Developers of the Ballentine project, acting at the encouragement of the board, are asking for a zoning change to allow for greater density and a commercial building in phases three and four of the project.

The owners of the Eubanks property were the only one of the five property owners approached by the town who are interested in participating in the town-sponsored workshop.

Members of the board debated whether it was worth holding a meeting on only one parcel and discussed expanding the range of conversation at the workshop to include a broader discussion of the Mayor Mark Chilton said he'd also like to see the community discussion go forward. He said he was not as concerned about adding density to the area as he is about doing so while preserving the status quo.

"I'm not afraid of the density," he said. "I'm afraid of 500 new homes and no commercial com-types of commercial space needed for the area.

Last week, during the beginning of the discussion of the Ballentine proposal, residents of Lake Hogan Farms and other nearby neighborhoods dispute the board's assertion that residents in the area have long sought some additional commercial uses in the area.

Board member Dan Coleman supported going ahead with the design workshop in order to gather more public input and test some of the ideas.

'We've been tossing these ideas around for years," he said, "and have not had a chance to put anything in the ground."

mixed-use zone results more in boutique businesses and not the kind of commercial spaces residents seek. She said the town should seek input from a large part of the northern area and not just from neighbors of the parcel under consideration.

Chilton said the town should also remain open to a purely commercial development for the area.

Board member Joal Hall Broun also suggested that the board consider types of commercial use in the area beyond retail.

In other action Tuesday night, the board heard a series of ideas from Catherine DeVine, chair of the town's Centennial Committee, on plans for next year's celebration. The town was chartered as Venable in 1911 and changed its name to Carrboro two years later.

The celebration is planned for Carrboro Day, which is May l this year.

Devine said The Arts Center has agreed to participate fully in the event both by combining the usual Carrboro Day activities at the Town Commons with its Circes des Arts circus performers and by hosting a celebration at the center > that evening. Board members asked for a staff review of plans and a proposed increase in the Carrboro Day budget of $6,500 for the celebration.

Board member Jacquie Gist noted that the town flag cites March 3, 1911 as the date of official charter and asked that the town hold some kind of ceremony on March 3 of next year as well.

Chatham commission acts on court facility plans

PITTSBORO — At a work session on Monday, the Chatham County Board of Commissioners provided direction to county staff to include a superior courtroom on the second floor as the Historic Courthouse is rebuilt.

We did not act on the entire report from the Historic Courthouse Task Force yet, but we needed to make a decision so that the rebuilding process for the Historic Courthouse can continue," said commission chair Sally Kost.

The commissioners agreed with the task force's recommendation that the courthouse should again have a superior courtroom on the second floor and that it should look similar to how it did before the fire.

"We will upgrade the courtroom's technology, sound and lighting and will ask the architect to look at options to make the space more flexible so that the room could potentially be used for other public functions,"

Based on cost estimates provided by Clancy and Theys Construction Company, Chatham County would save 50 percent if construction of the Judicial Center included completion of the second floor during construction, as opposed to waiting several years to complete the space that was previously scheduled to be completed at a later time. The company estimates the cost of finishing the entire building now would be less than $1 million, while finishing the space in five years would cost more than $1.5 million.

"Since it is a substantial savings to complete the building now as opposed to waiting several years, and court officials documented a need for additional court space, it makes good financial sense to finish the shell space that had been planned for future needs," said Kost.

Chief District Court Judge Joseph Buckner told the commissioners that having space for Superior Court in both the rebuilt Historic Courthouse and the new Judicial Center would address the backlog issues that crop up when a case drags out for many weeks. "I also expect us to use the courtroom in the Historic Courthouse for Superior Court civil cases, so it would be used regularly, even with space for Superior Court in the new Judicial Center."

The commissioners discussed various potential facilities for the first floor, including restrooms, a historical museum and a visitors' center, but did not make any decisions at this meeting. - Staff

Two banks robbed this week

Police do not believe two bank robberies in Orange County - one in Hillsborough and another in downtown Chapel Hill - are re-

Chapel Hill police released a photo of the man who walked into the BB&T at 143 E. Rosemary St. in downtown Chapel Hill and gave a teller a note demanding money. No weapon was displayed at the robbery, witnesses told police, and the robber fled the scene on foot with an undisclosed amount of money.

Anyone with information concerning the identity of this person, please call either the Chapel Hill Police Department at 968-2760 or Crime Stoppers at 942-7515. Calls to Crime Stoppers are confidential and anonymous and the caller may be eligible for a cash reward of up to $2,000 for information that leads to an arrest.

Hillsborough police are looking for a man who ordered customers and employees of the Community One Bank at Millstone Drive and Old N.C. 86 into the vault during a robbery around noon Tuesday. Police officers responding to the robbery were able to open the vault to free those inside.

The man is described as white, stocky and in his late 40s or early 50s. Anyone with information about the robbery is asked to call Sgt. Scott Nicolaysen at 732-9381,

HOUSE Calls

Practicing family physicians from the UNC Department of Family Medicine have teamed up with The Carrboro Citizen to bring you a weekly feature responding to your questions about health and medicine. Send your questions or comments to yourhealth@unc.edu

This week we respond to questions about emphysema and high blood pressure.

Dear HOUSE Calls,

have really bad emphysema and my doctor recently gave me theophylline. I'm on many inhalers and prednisone. It still flares at times and I need antibiotics and occasionally go to the hospital. I've never heard of this medicine before. Is it new? How well does it work?

Emphysema and COPD, or chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, are terrible and often progressive problems that result from long-time smoking. Doctors typically use inhalers like albuterol and atrovent or steroids, along with prednisone by mouth, to try to control these diseases. Theophylline is an older medicine that can help keep your lungs open and it is still an option for people with severe disease not controlled on other medicines. One of the problems with theophylline is that at usual doses it can elevate your heart rate and blood pressure, and it requires careful monitoring and dosing. Of course, the best treatment for emphysema is stopping smoking and avoiding exposure to secondhand smoke, if you have not already done this.

Dear HOUSE Calls, My doctor recently told me to start taking a new blood-pressure medicine called atenolol. I took it for two days and it did not seem to have any impact on my blood pressure. I went back to see him to tell him that it didn't work. He didn't seem pleased and told me I should have taken it longer before giving up on it. What do you think?

You're right, and your doctor is also right. You're checking your blood pressure regularly, and we would expect it to come down with atenolol or any new medicine. Not all meds work with every patient, so it might not be working with you. On the other hand, your doctor knows blood pressure and medicines better than you, and it does usually take a few days for a blood-pressure medication to take its full effect. We also hope your doctor talked with you about limiting or eliminating salt in your diet and other ways to lower your blood pressure without medicines. Treating any chronic disease like high blood pressure involves a partnership between you and your doctor, and you must discuss how long to take a medication, what to expect, why you might stop it and why you should continue it. So this is as much about your relationship with your doctor and the way you communicate with one another as the medicine or your blood pressure. We would encourage you to talk to your doctor about giving it another try, perhaps for four to six weeks. You might even need a dose increase, because most doctors start a medicine like atenolol at very low doses to decrease any side effects. If you have lost confidence in the medicine, it's OK to work with your doctor to find an alternative. However, atenolol is one of the blood-pressure medicines that is effective, safe and cheap. Good luck.

HOUSE Calls is a weekly column by Dr. Adam Goldstein, Dr. Cristy Page and Dr. Adam Zolotor on behalf of Your Health and the UNC Department of Family Medicine.

PETS OF THE WEEK

PAWS4EVER — Tiny T is a 5-year-old buff male domestic shorthair mix. He is a very active and happy fellow. He loves attention and is always purring and giving lots of head butts. He's a little difficult to get a picture of because he won't stop rubbing on the camera, silly guy. Tiny loves everyone and he doesn't mind dogs a bit either! He recently had his teeth cleaned and an entire mouth exam. After going through the painful exam and cleaning it was determined that he needs to stay on liquid doxy once daily to keep himself in check. He also needs to stay on predisone every other day as a preventive. If there is such a thing as a perfectly behaved kitty, Tiny would be that. Next time you are in Mebane, stop in and be greeted by Tiny T. and all his buds. Contact Paws4Ever, 6311 Nicks Road, Mebane or call 304-2300. You can also go online at paws4ever.org

nobody knows it better than the older adult dogs, who are often overlooked in shelters time and time again. People assume there must be something wrong with them or that they won't be as easy to mould into their lifestyle. But in reality, an older pet is often easier to train and more adaptable than a puppy! Many times, they're housetrained, well past their chewing stage and, most importantly, extremely grateful and aware when they are saved. Chester, a 7-year-old golden retriever, is one of those dogs. He's housetrained, loves car rides and is good with kids and other animals. He knows several commands and shares an appreciation for the finer things in life. In fact, Chester has just about every great quality you could ask for. So if you're looking for a handsome, loyal companion and could live without chewed shoes and 3 a.m. bathroom breaks, Chester might be just the pal for you. Visit him at Orange County Animal Services, 1601 Eubanks Road in Chapel Hill. You can also see him and other adoptable animals online at www.co. orange.nc.us/animalservices/ adoption.asp.

Zucchini Casserole (Serves 8–10) from Mary Soher, Market Shopper

Mary attended the 8th annual Chefs' Event at the Carrboro Farmers' Market on Sept. II. The theme of the event was The Buffet Table: Favorite Dishes for a Crowd. We asked customers, while waiting in line for the event, if they had a favorite buffet recipe that they would like to share. Twenty-three people put their names on the list. Try Mary's recipe today - it's the end of the season for zucchini and summer squash, so now's the time to take advantage of these summer vegetables. Thanks, Mary!

Ingredients:

4-5 small zucchini*

4-5 small yellow squash* or yellow zucchini*

I pint of sour cream

2 cups of shredded cheddar cheese I stick of butter

I package croutons

Procedure:

Slice the zucchini into ¼" rounds Blanch the zucchini by putting in boiling water for approximate 3-5 minutes or until squash is bright green or yellow. Salt in the water is optional.

Drain thoroughly.

Layer in a casserole dish the zucchini then sour cream then cheese.

Repeat.

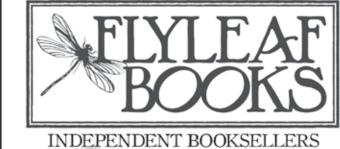

Take the bag of croutons and crush into crumbs. Sprinkle crumbs on top of casserole.

Melt the butter and drizzle over the top. Bake in 350-degree oven until casserole bubbles.

Adjust the number of zucchini for the number of people. You can use light sour cream. Use sour cream and cheese according to taste.

If you have a roast in the oven, put in with the roast to brown and bubble.

Casserole can be made in the morning and baked later in

Right call on Smith Level

After decades of negotiation, a deal is finally in hand on improvements to Smith Level Road from the Morgan Creek bridge to Ray Road. The project includes new bikes lanes, sidewalks, improved signals and turn lanes and a roundabout at the Rock Haven intersection, which feeds Carrboro High.

Nearly all of these improvements are aimed at making one of the unfriendliest stretches to walk or bike into a far safer and more inviting place to do so.

Smith Level will change considerably in the years ahead, and how motorists behave on the road has to change as well. There is still a feeling among too many drivers that once you've crossed under the N.C. 54 overpass, it's time to gun it.

And though it's been more than a year since it changed not many folks seem to have noticed that the speed limit from town to past Dogwood Acres is 35 miles per hour with a 25-miles-per-hour school zone around CHS.

As happens with any big decision, some people walked away from last week's meeting disappointed. The board, as the mayor put it, had a choice between making improvements that would serve a big part of the southern part of the town and pleasing residents of Berryhill, who will most certainly see a major shift in how traffic flows in and out of their neighborhood.

The victory for Carrboro in the negotiations with the N.C. Department of Transportation is a plan that eschews more vehicle lanes and focuses on alternative transit. Bicycling, walking and using the bus system are all bound to get easier. And with the addition of a planned greenway under the Morgan Creek bridge, the prospect of walking to Frank Porter Graham will open up for more students in neighborhoods west of Smith Level.

The struggle to come up with a workable plan took far longer than anyone expected and we trust whatever transportation tussle comes next will be resolved in a considerably shorter span.

That there seems to be a shift in the DOT toward a less car-centric outlook and greater cooperation with local governments should make getting to "yes" all the more likely.

Made his mark

You can find the work of Arthur Cogswell throughout the heart of Chapel Hill in neighborhoods like Morgan Creek, Mason Farm and Lakewood, where his modern designs are prime examples of an architectural renaissance that sought a greater harmony between the homes of this town and the hills and creek valleys in which they're nestled.

Cogswell, who passed away last week, leaves not only a physical legacy, but also one of ideas. He mentored many of this area's best architects and led inspired efforts to use design to advance humanitarian principles.

North Carolina's broken emergency mental health system

VICKI SMITH

A while ago, my friend fell and broke her hip and knee. What happened next was exactly what should happen in a crisis. She was transported to a local emergency room and immediately treated. She received appropriate care until she was transferred to a rehabilitation center. Once there, she received treatment designed to help her regain her mobility and ultimately return home. And while there was a ton of paper work, there was never any question that she would get the necessary treatment.

Compare that story to one about a young man diagnosed with post traumatic stress syndrome. His parents called the police when he became violent and threatened to kill them. When the police arrived, the young man was angry and out of control. He was subdued, handcuffed, put in the back of the police cruiser and taken to the local hospital. Because there were no beds available at any of the state's psychiatric hospitals, he stayed handcuffed to a stretcher in the emergency department with a 24hour. police detail. Finally, after 96 hours without treatment, he calmed down and was discharged, but his elderly parents were afraid to let him come home. His options - live on the streets, homeless, or find a bed in an adult care home (ACH). Either choice left him without treatment for his mental illness, increasing the chance that a crisis would happen again.

Sadly, this is not an isolated story. Over 6,000 adults with mental illness live in ACHs in North Carolina. And that number only reflects people with a known mental illness. There isn't an accurate count of the number of people who would rather be homeless than live in an institutional setting like an ACH or who are not receiving any services at all. With extreme cuts in funding, that number is likely to grow and include more people with other types of disabilities.

So why aren't there better options? The quick answer is lack of funding. But there's clearly more to the story than that. Lots of other important solutions must be identified.

In addition to allocating more resources, we must determine exactly what needs to be done. What would services in the community look like that would prevent the cycle of crisis situations described above? Are crisis services adequate and available across > the state? What response would meet the needs of people with disabilities in crisis and be in compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA)? How do we make funding for community-based services a priority in the state's budget, especially since the state's revenue projections for next year are expected to be worse than this year? How do we get the legislature to stop cutting services and develop a more balanced solution?

It is no surprise to mental health consumers, their families and advocates that we were able to document a fractured system of care.

> To find the answers, our staff at Disability Rights North Carolina reviewed death and incident reports at ACHs and, with the help of UNC law students, visited over a dozen adultcare homes throughout North Carolina. What we found confirmed our suspicions in vibrant detail: adults in their 20s living with adults in their 70s in ACHs, ACHs where 100 percent of the residents have a serious mental illness but receive no therapeutic or rehabilitative services and deplorable institutional living environments.

It is no surprise to mental health consumers, their families and advocates that we were able to document a fractured system of care. Our work is certainly not the first to document that the system is broken. But rather than just issue another report, we also filed a complaint with the U.S. Department of Justice. We have asked that they investigate the state's non-compliance with the community-integration mandate of the ADA as evidenced by the failure to provide a comprehensive communitybased system of care.

North Carolina has had more than 10 years to create a real strategy to achieve a comprehensive community-based system instead of looking at institutional-based care as the solution. The disability community has waited long enough for the state to develop a meaningful, detailed plan. Perhaps with the Department of Justice's intervention, a real plan can be written.

With stable housing, long-term support services like peer support psychosocial rehabilitation, medication management and supportive employment, the cycle of institutionalization can be broken. Our state can get to a point at which the response to a mental health crisis is at least as good as it is when there is a physical health crisis. Let's not wait any longer to get about the business of making this a reality.

Vicki Smith is the executive director of Disability Rights N.C.

Be aware

Mental Illness Awareness Week (MIAW) takes place Oct. 3-9. It's an opportunity to learn more about serious mental illnesses such as major depression, bipolar disorder and schizophrenia. The good news is that treatment does work and recovery and stability are possible, but stigma is a major barrier to people seeking help when they need it. The more people know, the better they can help themselves or their loved ones get the support they need.

When mental health care is cut, greater costs often result from lost jobs and careers, broken families, more homelessness, higher insurance costs, more welfare and much more expensive costs for hospital emergency rooms, nursing homes, schools, police and courts, jails and prisons.

OPC Area Program is the local governmental agency responsible for oversight and management of publicly funded mental health, developmental disability and substance abuse services in Orange, Person and Chatham counties. OPC provides screening, triage and referral for individuals needing services in the area; recruits and monitors an array of community service providers; and manages the distribution of state monies for services to consumers. If you think you or your family is in need of and may qualify for publicly funded services, you can call OPC's Screening, Triage, Access and Referral (STAR) Line at 913-4100 or 1-800-233-6834. Thanks, music lovers

The 13th annual Carrboro Music Festival took place on Sunday, Sept. 26th, and, for the first time, we had to deal with a serious rainfall. It was very difficult to cancel some very popular outdoor venues, but, as predicted, it began to rain in the early afternoon. I've received many congratulations over the last few days and I'd like to send out my personal thanks to all who contributed to Carrboro's always-special (and this year, somewhat challenging) day.

Thank you to the Carrboro Recreation and Parks Department, with very special thanks to Recreation Supervisor Kim Andrews, who works as long and hard on the event as I do! Kudos to Recreation Administrator Dennis Joines for doing the website. I'd also like to thank the Public Works Department and Streets Superintendent David Poythress, the Police Department and Captain Joel Booker and the Fire Department under Fire Chief Travis Crabtree.

Many thanks to the 2010 volunteer committee members: Charlie Berry, Catherine DeVine, Tony Galiani, Michael Gowan, Jackie Helvey, Meg Mc-Gurk and Janet Place. Special thanks to Meg for her invaluable volunteer coordination and to Janet for her fantastic graphic-design work. Finally, thanks to all the generous sponsors, the venues and all the musicians who donate their time and abilities.

ENDORSEMENT LETTER

North Carolinians of the 23rd district are fighting to hold a promise.

Five weeks out from perhaps the most pivotal election period in two decades, residents of Orange and Person counties are supporting a new candidate for the North Carolina Senate. They don't support Ryan Hilliard, who possesses strong ties to Chapel Hill as well as extensive experience with small business, because he promises expansive services or tax incentives to large corporations. In fact, Mr. Hilliard's style is just the opposite.

Voters support Ryan Hilliard because they have promises to keep of their own. A promise of choice impels action and Ryan Hilliard supports maximizing freedom for individuals.

Ryan Hilliard understands the everyday choices that build a stronger North Carolina are tough choices that keep North Carolinians working in the private sector. Hilliard has committed to putting control to create new job opportunities back in the hands of employers by passing the Healthcare Freedom Protection Act, which will keep employees on deck and employers in business. He also wants to put control of personal property back in the hands of North Carolinians by taking a strong stance on land-use issues, starting by voting for the Eminent Domain constitutional amendment. He also wants to promote competition and choice in education by eliminating the cap on

Unlike our current state Senator, Ellie Kinnaird, Ryan Hilliard does not subscribe to the notion that government is the answer to all our problems. He affirms home-grown ingenuity by joining the charge when residents of the 23rd District make a promise to take back this community at the polls. Nov. 2. Early voting starts Oct. 14.

Lottery without limits

CHRIS FITZSIMON

The recent report by Sarah Ovaska of N.C. Policy Watch that the percentage of revenue raised by the N.C. Education Lottery going to education programs has dropped to 29 percent is sparking a renewed debate about the lottery and the wisdom of funding recurring programs with its proceeds. And it's long overdue.

When lawmakers passed the lottery in 2005, the promise was that 35 cents of every dollar would go to fund early-childhood programs, class-size reductions and college scholarships. But as Ovaska reports, the lottery law was changed two years later to make the 35 percent a goal, not a mandate, with the promise that more money overall would flow to education from lottery proceeds.

Lottery officials are quick to point out that's exactly what happened. But it's hardly that simple. Ovaska reports that the lottery sent $419 million to the state for education programs in 2009-10, $8 million more than the previous year. But lottery sales increased $140 million over the same period. That means $140 million dollars was taken out of the state's economy for an $8 million increase in education funding. And the numbers are worse when you consider some individual games.

Ovaska highlights one game with a $20 ticket that raised $6 million. But after payouts for prizes, advertising and other expenses, it raised only $222,000 for education. That's just 4 percent, less than the state sales tax.

The reactions by Gov. Beverly Perdue and lottery officials to Ovaska's report are almost as troubling as her findings.

Perdue says she doesn't mind that the percentage going to education is dropping as long as the amount keeps increasing. Lottery spokesman Van Denton wrote in a response that it's best to think of it all as a pie and when the lottery makes the overall pie bigger, each slice to the state is larger.

Perdue and Denton are willing to ignore the percentages and focus only on how much the lottery is raising for education. But surely there's a point at which that makes no financial sense.

What if lottery officials need to keep boosting advertising and lowering the percentage that comes back to the state? How much money are they willing to take out of North Carolina's economy for a dwindling return for education?

The nearly $1.5 billion spent last year on lottery tickets last year would not be stuffed under mattresses if the lottery did not exist. People would spend it on restaurants, travel, clothes, not to mention food and shelter.

Most of the purchases would be taxed and almost all of them would help create or sustain jobs in the state. That doesn't happen with the lottery. The state's share is the state's share. The rest goes to advertising, administration, prizes and profits for out-of-state lottery companies.

It is objectionable enough that the state is funding schools and programs for at-risk kids by trying to convince people, including the poor, to waste their money on a one-in-a-million chance of striking it rich.

Now we have state officials justifying draining larger and larger amounts of money from the state's economy in a desperate attempt to increase the funds the lottery sends

In the long run, it's a losing, inefficient and ill-advised proposition.

"The neighbors were up in arms about it and it was a big deal," said Bo Howes, conservation project manager for TLC. "It would have changed the character of the area out there."

Through 11 different transactions, Brumley purchased the land, piece by piece, until the proposed development was but a memory. He used the land to hunt, run a timber company, known as New Hope Timber, and farm crops for personal use.

"He intended to put a conservation easement on that property during his lifetime so that it wouldn't be further developed," Howes said.

"Our brother was a conservationist and hunter who had a great love of the land," Marie Brumley Foster and Nancy Brumley Robitaille, George Brumley's sisters, wrote in an email. "He knew a great deal about the local wildlife and vegetation and did a great deal to enhance the property."

But in 2003, tragedy struck the Brumley family, when a plane carrying George and Julia Brumley, their two children and other family members crashed into a mountainside in Kenya, killing everyone on board.

"At that point, there was a lot of confusion about what would happen," Howes said. The land was passed to the Zeist Foundation, an Atlanta-based foundation started by George Brumley's

At the time of his death, George Brumley served on the board of TLC, and later the Zeist Foundation offered the land to TLC at a purchase price of $4 million, less than half of the property's appraised value. Through grants, including a large grant from the Clean Water Management Trust Fund, TLC was able to fund the purchase of the property.

"As a TLC board member, George believed strongly in its mission and worked on many of its land transactions," Robitaille and Foster wrote. "We think he and Julia would be very happy that New Hope Timber is now part of their legacy of land conservation."

TLC hasn't yet determined how they're going to use the land,

Howes said, adding that there are dozens of potential uses. Over the next few years, TLC will determine how the property will be made accessible to the public.

"It's just a gorgeous piece of property, and it's a gorgeous place to connect with nature and see what's out there," Howes said. "It's also a great place to go and walk and hike."

Triangle residents' drinking water will be protected along with the property, he added, since the property is host to streams and wetlands that feed the Eno River and ultimately Falls Lake.

TLC owns about 4,000 acres of land, and protects more than 14,000 through conservation easements and partnerships with other organizations.

The county has more than 4,000 acres of land identified as urban transition areas, where higher levels of density are planned. Economicdevelopment districts include the Efland/Mebane/Buckhorn area and the Eno district in the eastern part of the county. If approved, the establishment of utility districts would include a "backbone" utility system that would allow individual projects along the corridor to connect to the master system.

County planning director Craig Benedict said the county could create multiple districts within the districts in order to identify each area's unique needs and existing infrastructure.

Commissioner Alice Gordon said she wants to be clear about how much installing water and sewer would cost before the county commits to the project.

"We want to do this. We understand the importance of having infrastructure ... and we're talking about not having burdensome tax levels [in the districts]," Gordon said, adding, "But we don't want it to be burdensome on the general taxpayer either."

Commissioner Barry Jacobs said he wanted to be sure the public knew that an eminentdomain clause in the utility district plan was not for development but infrastructure.

"It is not our intention to be condemning land for economicdevelopment purposes," Jacobs said. "This would be related to water and sewer extensions and only as a last resort." Clifton urged the commissioners to move forward with "If you create the opportunity of water and sewer extension, you are creating the viability of this district," he said.

Staff will return to the commissioners with a water and sewer district map and the county will hold a public hearing on the possible utility districts within the next several months.

Arthur Cogswell

Arthur Cogswell, 79, died Wednesday, September 29 of a brain injury due to a severe fall while walking his dog. His beloved wife, Marian, and his two daughters were able to be with him in his final hours.

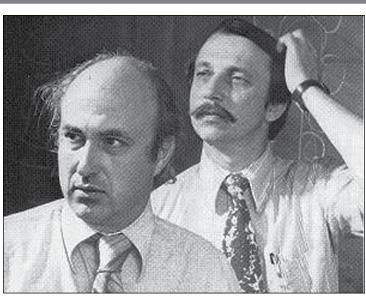

Cogswell was born October 29, 1930 in Jacksonville, Fla., the son of the late Eunice and Arthur Ralph Cogswell Sr. He received his undergraduate degree in drama at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and his architectural degree from the Design School at North Carolina State University. He also served in the U.S. Air Force during the Korean War.

He was recently nominated for the prestigious Kamphoefner Award, named for the Design School's first dean.

Cogswell began his archiwas joined by his partner, Werner Hausler, in 1967. For decades, Cogswell Hausler Associates was known as a proving ground for ambitious young architects and won numerous awards for groundbreaking modernist design.

Cogswell leaves a legacy of 30- and 40-year-old houses that still look modern today.

In 1972, Cogswell was named a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects. At the time,

Asian American Parent Council to hold conference

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Asian American Parent Council invites the public to their Third Annual Parent Conference on Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Smith Middle School Auditorium.

Dr. Jackson Chiu, chief psychiatrist at N.C. State University, will discuss ways to raise emotionally healthy children, identify signs of emotional stress and prevent stress. The event also will feature a panel of college students who will discuss the pros and cons of living in a bicultural environment.

Childcare will be available on site for children in kindergarten through fifth grade.

Parent Night planned

Chapel Hill-Carrboro City Schools will hold Exceptional Children Parent Night on Oct. 19 from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at Carrboro Elementary School.

The event is designed for parents of preschool and elementary school children with special needs, including those with Individual Education Plans or Section 504 Plans. Three breakout sessions will address behavior strategies in the home and community, the transition from pre-K to kindergarten and the basics of special education.

Contact Karen Patillo at 967-8211, ext. 28234 by Oct. 14 to reserve childcare at the event.

Clemson is a fine football team, but this is not the 1981 national championship team. These Tigers are 10th out of 12 ACC teams in rushing defense. UNC is coming off a game in which Johnny White ran for 140 yards dium. The game will be broadand Shaun Draughn 137. That is a total of 263 yards rushing.

Quarterback T.J. Yates threw for another 181 yards and two touchdowns. The Tar Heels defeated East Carolina 42-17.

Successfully running the ball and throwing intermediate passes to H-back Zack Pianalto contributed to a successful running game. Those attributes paved the way for UNC wide receivers to get wide open deep three times for what could have been easy touchdowns.

This is not criticism of Yates. Those are passes he usually throws well, but he probably had so much adrenaline pumping through his body it affected his accuracy. To his credit, what Yates did not do was throw an interception.

"It's a fraction of a second, a half-of-foot type of deal," Yates said. "We left three big ones out

Offensive coordinator John Shoop deserves credit for, once in his life, sticking with the running game when it was working and then slipping in the occasional deep pass to shake up the Pirates defense.

All too frequently, one gets a sense that Shoop has to show everyone how smart he is by abandoning the running game when that is what carried the Tar Heels the length of the field. And all too often, the ensuing throws turn into incomplete passes or, worse yet, interceptions.

There is no reason a similar game plan would not work for the Tar Heels (2-2, 0-1 in the ACC) this Saturday at 3:30 p.m. against Clemson (2-2, 0-1) at Kenan Sta-cast on cable network ESPN and ABC.

Carolina's offensive line is maturing quickly, as it showed by dominating ECU in the second half. Clemson will be tougher to block, but another intelligent game plan that emphasizes rushing will provide help when the Tar Heels do pass.

Clemson is eighth in the ACC in rushing defense, allowing 181 yards per game.

"That is the best thing for the O-linemen," freshman tackle James Hurst said. "We got a chance to run the ball. We just kept pounding it, and everyone gets more and more excited the more yards we get."

Keep in mind that the Tar Heels have traditionally lost few games when they run for more than 200 yards.

The intermediate throws to Pianalto were every bit as important as the successful runs. Those intermediate routes provide Yates with a clear target when the opposing secondary is doing all it can to slow UNC's fast wide receivers.

"At halftime, we said we were going to stick to the game plan," Yates said. "And our game plan was to come in here and run the ball a whole lot."

There is an old cliché in football that you ought to dance with the one who brought you. Carolina had better find that old gal and give her another twirl on

FOOTBALL Riverside 40 - East Chapel Hill 23

East Chapel Hill quarterback Drew Davis angrily paced the sideline during the fourth quarter of Friday night's game. Injured by an out-of-bounds hit in the second quarter and then again by a sack in the third, he could only watch as the game spiraled out of control. His frustration was echoed in the overflowing student section, as East's fans watched their Wildcats lose on homecoming to previously winless Riverside (1-5).

After building a 20-7 lead and riding high on the spirit of the night, East Chapel Hill (1-6) seemed destined to extend its homecoming win streak to two. Rather than providing further proof that the program had turned the corner, however, the game took a sickly turn for the Wildcats after Davis was sidelined with a shoulder injury. Despite his brief return in the third quarter, it was clear that East's offensive momentum was gone. Wildcat fans could only shake their heads as the Pirates of Riverside outscored their team 33-3 after the midway point of the second quarter.

Riverside struck first, but was able to finally regain the lead thanks to a botched punt attempt by Tyler Klimko, filling in for Davis, who usually handles East's punting duties. A 27-yard Andrew Moore field goal followed for the Wildcats, but that was all they would get for the rest of the game.

East will seek redemption, with or without Davis, this week against Northern Durham.

Carrboro 26 - Pfafftown Reagan 13

They're good. If people hadn't heard, Carrboro gave them an earful last week with a lights-out performance over 4A Ronald Reagan High.

Nassar Omar, who was on the receiving end of every one of Carrboro's four touchdowns on Friday, finished the game with 231 total receiving yards and demi-god status among Jaguar fans. Amazingly, this accounted for only a little more than half of quarterback Derek Bryant's total passing yardage, which amounted to an amazing 397 by game's end.

Reagan, whose sizable defensive line all but precluded any sort of running attack on Carrboro's part, lead 7-6 early on, but would not score again until late in the game. Meanwhile, the Jaguars kept their offensive output steady at a rate of one score per quarter.

Carrboro will host South Granville this Friday.

Orange-pimpled, fleshy spiked larvae of pipevine swallowtails are distinctive.

In late spring, flowers of pipevine are most engaging (see photo above) and do evoke an image of the Sherlock Holmes' Dutchman's smoking pipe. If any pipevine swallowtail butterflies are around, you can count on those spinylooking, orange-pimpled, black larvae (caterpillars) devouring the entire vine. Don't get out the spray can. The vines will recover soon after those ravenous caterpillars have moved on to their quiet resting stage before emerging as beautiful black-and-blue adults. In addition to the pipevine swallowtails in the garden, Nancy and Maggie were able to capture, in photos from some distance away, the red-spotted purple butterfly, so similar in appearance that it is unlikely to become a meal for numerous potential predators.

You can observe nature's mimicry in your garden by growing pipevines of your own. Unfortunately, the Botanical Garden has no more pipevine plants available this year. However, Niche Gardens has plants of a closely related species, the wooly Dutchman's pipe, Aristolochia tomentosa, which naturally occurs in South Carolina and is successfully cultivated here in our area. It also is a preferred food plant of larvae of the pipevine swallowtail. Larvae of the mimic red-spotted purple feed on wild willow and black cherry, two tree species very common in our area.

In addition to enjoying the flowers of your Dutchman's pipevines, you can develop skills distinguishing the two butterfly species.

Many thanks to Nancy and Maggie for sharing their pipevine story.

Pomp and Flip-Flops, '05

niversity Day, which comes our way next Tuesday, is meant to be a day of dignified celebration. Members of the distinguished faculty and administration assemble in full regalia at the venerable Old Well and thence stride with measured pace to Memorial Hall for a ceremony marking this fine old university's birthright. How is it, then, that we see a brazen undergrad, in Bermuda shorts and flip-flops, flat on his back, pointing a camera in a most unceremonious fashion – up at the academic dons? Ah, that would be the fault of the young man's creative "perfesser," who thought that the University Day festivities would make a cool photo opportunity for his fledgling photo class. While The Citizen reserves the right to protect the identity of the wellmeaning instructor, Ik Words can't guarantee that the scenario won't be re-enacted this Tuesday (except this time we'll have a dress code).
