INTRO

A friend recently updated his Facebook status to note that he has lived here for so long that he was genuinely surprised this year when it got cold in January. That and a few inches of snow — a particularly nice variety that was good for sledding — and we all now are official veterans of winter. Great. Now let's get on with balmier times.

One lovely way to warm things up this time of year is to revel in the traditions of Valentine's Day, including the highly important wide distribution of well-made chocolate.

In this issue of MILL, we plunge headlong into the holiday, which falls this year on a Saturday night and promises to be a busy one at local restaurants. With that in mind, make those reservations early. You or your loved one might not care to opt for Friday, especially if either of you has a touch of paraskavedekatriaphobia and something romantic planned. (Our dining guide is on page 6.)

GUIDLINES FOR V-DAY GIVING

BY MARGOT C. LESTER

You can recover from giving somebody a less-than-ideal birthday or Christmas present. But when it comes to Valentine's Day, love's not only not blind, but it ain't unconditional either. During my seven years as a love advice columnist for Match.com, I've heard horror stories from men and women about inappropriate, unoriginal and down-right tacky gifts that have caused everything from giggles to get-out-of-my-lives. Here is some of what I've learned:

Invest in each other. Surveys by Match.com and Jewelry.com found that a night of pampering, cuddling and being together with only simple gifts given is a perfectly acceptable way of spending Valentine's night. This doesn't give you carte blanche to cheap out though. Plan something that you both enjoy or that makes it clear to your sweetie that she or he is the object of your affection. (nudge, nudge)

CAUTION: If the thought of spending hours hanging out with your honey makes you wince, that's a good sign that you shouldn't be together in the first place. It may be time to exit stage left.

Do it yourself. Remember those hand-made Valentine's you created for your mama or daddy? They weren't destined for the Louvre, but your folks couldn't have been happier. You can bowl over your baby by making something by hand — candy, cupcakes, jewelry, a slide show, a card or a full-on romantic dinner.

CAUTION: Don't wait till the last minute to throw something together. Without the thought, it's just a low-rent present that shrieks, "I guess I'm just not that into you."

Consider candy carefully. Those celo-wrapped heart-shaped boxes from the grocery or convenience store have turned a perfectly delicious treat into a cliché. If you know your sugar has a sweet tooth, put forth some effort and buy hand-crafted fancy chocolates or candies, preferably from a local provider. You'll get all kinds of style points for creativity, and a little extra love for supporting the local economy.

CAUTION: Beware lite or sugar-free sweets. You may be trying to say, "I care about your health," but your special someone is more likely to think something more along the lines of, "I knew he thought I was fat!" Sayonara!

Say it with flowers: I don't know many women who'd turn down a gorgeous bouquet of roses, but, despite the dramatic look, it's another tragic cliché. On the upside, a lot of dudes dig getting flowers (nothing says "Chicks dig me" more – at least nothing that's acceptable for delivery in the office). So skip the obvious and send a mixed bouquet based on your flame's favorite color. And if your romantic partner really does relish roses, make sure they're sustainably grown so you can show Mother Earth some love too.

CAUTION: The allergist down the street asks me to remind you to make sure your sweetheart's not allergic to certain flowering plants. Inducing an allergic reaction (or worse, anaphylactic shock) is no way to say "I love you."

Bag some bubbly. Champagne is another traditional V-Day item. I like mine bone dry, but why not buy a few splits and do a tasting flight to see which appeals to you and your sweet thang? If you're doing the chocolate thing, the right red wine would make a fine accompaniment too.

CAUTION: Cheap champagne (as opposed to reasonably priced good stuff) is another way of saying the bearer wants to have his or her way with you and doesn't care if you both have a headache in the morning. If your babe bestows this stuff on you, hand it back and give him or her the Heisman in return.

That's the low-down on Valentine's Day gifts. Here's hoping Cupid's aim is true.

SWEETS FOR THE SWEET, LOCAL STYLE

BY MARGOT C. LESTER ♦ PHOTOS BY AVA BARLOW

The Aztecs called it xocolatl, which translates roughly to "bitter water." But they couldn't have been all that bitter about it because they also associated it with Xochiquetzal, the goddess of fertility. Perhaps that's why we associate chocolate with Valentine's Day and other opportunities to win one another's affections. But is there more to the magic of chocolate than ancient deities and gift-giving traditions? Possibly. In one study, melting chocolate in the mouth increased heart rate and brain activity more intensely than passionate kissing. Whoa!

Whatever the reason, we love our chocolate. And we love giving (and getting) it for Valentine's Day. From the dreaded (and clichéd) Whitman's heart-shaped sampler to expensive imported confections, sweets for the sweet are pretty much a required element for a romantic Valentine's Day. This year, why don't you show a little love for the object of your affection and your community by buying your Valentine's Day candy from a local maker?

Here are three:

Of course, if you want to get your candy along with a whole slew of other goodies, head to Chapel Hill's mega gourmet grocery A Southern Season in University Mall. They've got more high-end chocolate than you can shake a stick at. And at least you'll be spending your tax dollars with a "big box" that's locally owned and operated.

Fancy chocolates also are available from the local outpost of Dutch chocolate-maker Chocolaterie Stam at Chapel Hill North.

Editor's note: Did we miss a local maker of chocolates? Are there local candy makers we should know about before the next sweet-centric holiday (that'd be Easter)? Drop a line with the business' name and contact information to margot@carrborocitizen.com

FOR THE LOVE OF FOOD

BY MARGOT C. LESTER

Chef Ricky Moore of Carrboro's Glasshalfull wants your Valentine's Day meal to be memorable for the right reasons.

"Don't do something overly complicated just to try to impress your loved one," he says. "When you feel uptight, cooking becomes a burden and then it's over in terms of feeling. You want to be inspired by the cooking, and you put passion into every dish. Trust me, they'll appreciate the act of cooking itself. So do what you can and do it well."

That doesn't mean cooking up the same roast chicken you make every Sunday though.

"If you're great at roasting chicken, apply that technique to duck or squab," he says. "Take any technique you've mastered and apply it to something new."

Technique, Moore adds, is the secret to making a memorable meal. He likes roasting and braising for romantic meals because they make the food more succulent and show that you spent some time on the dish.

"It's not the ingredients," he asserts, "it's the way you handle them." That's where the love shows through.

Which brings us to planning. The biggest mistake home cooks make is not being organized, he says. Moore suggests planning the meal and getting the ingredients early, then doing a little prep each day before the big meal. This helps you avoid freaking out or spending all your time in the kitchen instead of with the object of your affection.

But if the thought of cooking a romantic meal – or having to undertake the decidedly unromantic task of cleaning up the kitchen – makes you weak in the knees, Moore invites you to his place for Valentine's.

Though the menu wasn't final at press time, Moore's cooking up what he calls a "menu for two" that's designed for sharing.

"It's going to be crafted to allow you to serve each other at the table to make it more intimate and romantic," he says. "I'm looking at a lobster prep or a rack of lamb. And for dessert – remember back in high school when you went on a date and shared one milkshake with two straws and you'd head-butt each other a little bit? I'm going to invoke that memory. I want to have fun with it, to keep it interactive and memorable."

Reservations are suggested for Valentine's dinner at Glasshalfull. Call 967-9784.

Ricky Moore is the executive chef of Glasshalfull in Carrboro.

Chef Ricky Moore's tips for making a great Valentine's Day dinner:

1. Don't be generic about it. You could buy that heart-shaped box of chocolates, but don't.
2. Let your passion for your loved one drive your choice of dish and ingredients.
3. Remember that cooking for someone is one of the most intimate things you can do. That's good stuff.

RE-EXAMINING RELIGION: 'DO GOOD. BE NICE. HAVE FUN'

BY VICKY DICKSON

“Writing fiction is as close to being God as you can get.” You might not expect to hear those words uttered by a twice-baptized fellow who grew up attending church five days a week. But James Protzman isn't your average Jesus invocator. Nor is he your average graduate of the United States Naval Academy or your average business writer – although all that appears on his resume. As does his work as a founding blogger on blunc.com and his term on the Chapel Hill Town Council.

Pretty impressive. What's even more impressive is that he's managed to write a fascinating novel, Jesus Swept, along the way. A story of encounters between margin dwellers and establishment types that is set in motion by a thousand-year-old silver bracelet, the novel should be especially interesting to residents of Chapel Hill and the N.C. coast, where all the action takes place. A street sweeper called Jesus, the orphaned twins Hook and Sink, a development director at Duke who hears the voices of pelicans and a mysterious old woman called Dog all grab a reader's imagination – and don't let go, even after the last page is turned.

In a way, Jesus Swept is a knotting together of the disparate threads of Protzman's life. Business writing taught him tight construction and blogging gave him the opportunity to get instant reader feedback on his writing. The church services he was forced to attend at the Naval Academy, with their emphasis on Christian soldiers fighting for God and democracy, inspired Protzman's rejection of his own religious upbringing.

The portrayal of organized religion in Jesus Swept might well persuade readers that Protzman has little use for the church. Given that his most unsympathetic character is a preacher – and a randy, not-very-honest one at that – few readers would expect to see the novelist giving a sermon at a Unitarian church in Hillsborough, as he did one recent Sunday. They'd perhaps be even more surprised to know that the inspiration for Jesus Swept came during a long-ago service, in the form of a bumper sticker Protzman doodled that said, “Do good. Be Nice. Have fun.”

That phrase evolved into a Venn diagram, three circles interconnecting in a “sweet spot” that is, for Protzman, the ultimate goal of living. He's personally pretty comfortable with the “Do good” part, is getting better at “Be nice” – but thinks he has a ways to go with “Have fun.” (Although he admits to loving the work of writing Jesus Swept – so maybe he's closer than he thinks.)

And that phrase – “Do good. Be nice. Have fun.” – is the real message Protzman hopes readers will take away from Jesus Swept. Given the enchanting characters, fast-paced plot and alliterative word play, “Have fun,” at least, should be a slam dunk.

“Writing fiction is as close to being God
as you can get.”
