2. He is, whenever duties will admit, to employ his mates and the men of his crew, in fitting the breeching, and tackle, that they may be ready for the guns when received on board.

3. He is to examine very carefully into the state of the magazine, the magazine, that he may be certain of its being properly fitted and perfectly dry, before the powder is carried on board; but if he should find any appearance of dampness, he is to report it to the captain, that it may be properly dried.

4. He is to inform the captain when the powder will be ready to be sent on board, that the fire in the galley may be put out, before the vessel which carries it is suffered to come along side. While the powder is taking into the ship, no candles are to be kept lighted, except those in the light room; nor is any man to be allowed to smoke tobacco. Such certificate must be countersigned by the commanding officer of the station; and upon such certificate, so countersigned, the purser of the ship, to which such assistant officer may belong, should pay him accordingly, keeping the certificate, with a receipt, as his vouchers in the settlement of his account with the Navy Department.

10. When men are to be transported from distant In cases places, the recruiting officer should apply to the com-where men manding officer of the station for the means, and if ne- are to be transported cessary, for an officer to take charge of them; and if the from distant commanding officer should not have a public vessel at his places. disposal, he should direct the agent of the station to furnish private conveyance, to be paid by the agent and charged to the department.

11. In no case should a recruiting officer have Advances of more than one thousand dollars advanced to him at any money to re-one time; when the amount received shall be accounted eers. for, he can, on his requisition, countersigned by the commanding officer of the station, obtain a further supply from the agent of the station, if an officer of the rank of master commandant, and employed at a regular recruiting establishment; and from the purser of the ship or station, if the recruiting officer be of an inferior grade.

12. While men are on board the receiving ship, they Howmen should receive no supplies of clothing, or other articles may receive from the purser of the station, but on the requisition of supplies of the recruiting officer, countersigned by the commanding on board a reofficer of the station; nor should such purser receive a ceiving ship. credit for the same, from the purser of the ship to which he may belong, until the requisition so countersigned, the man's receipt for the articles, and the account therefor, approved by the recruiting officer, and by the commanding officer of the station, should be delivered to such ship purser.

Guards pacity of landlords.

13. That seamen should be rescued, as far as pracagainst the ra- ticable from the pangs of rapacious landlords, and others, who, frequently taking advantage of the habits of intoxication, and generally unsuspicous characters, swindle them of the whole amount advanced to them by the recruiting officer, and to the prejudice of the scamen, and of the service generally, leave them in a naked and destitute condition at the time of their appearance on board. To prevent these practices, recruiting officers should be directed, never to deliver the advance into the hands of any other than the man enlisted; to use every argument to induce all persons enlisting, to repair on board the receiving ship with his clothing; in which case he should he authorized to make the customary advance without taking security, and he should be particularly directed to attend to collecting and sending on board all the clothing and other effects of seamen and others, entered for the service, and take every means in his power to render the service as pleasing as possible.
