

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATIONOffice of the Secretary*14 CFR Part 399*[Docket No. OST-2003-15592]*RIN 2105-AA46*Preemption in Air Transportation; Policy Statement Amendment*AGENCY: Department of Transportation.ACTION: Final rule.

SUMMARY: This action ends a rulemaking commenced by the Civil Aeronautics Board in 1979, in which it announced interim policies to implement provisions of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 dealing with federal preemption. The Department of Transportation, which succeeded to various Civil Aeronautics Board functions, has concluded that the interim policy statement is of limited current value. Its major issue—continued intrastate economic regulation of air carriers—has long since been resolved. Its remaining subjects continue to evolve and are more appropriately addressed on a case-by-case basis rather than by a statement of general policy. The interim final policy is accordingly removed. The Department of Transportation will continue to monitor developments and to offer the proper interpretation of the statute's preemption provision in appropriate fact-specific circumstances.

EFFECTIVE DATE: July 24, 2003.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: In February 1979, the former Civil Aeronautics Board (“CAB” or “Board”) adopted interim final policies devoted in the main to the authority of state and federal governments to regulate air carriers operating pursuant to federal authority. Policy Statement-83 (February 7, 1979) (“PS-83”); 44 FR 9951 (February 15, 1979); 14 CFR 399.110. The policy statement addressed questions arising about the preemption provision of the then-newly enacted Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 (Pub. L. 95-504, 92 Stat. 1707) (“ADA”), now codified at 49 U.S.C. 41713, and it asked for comment to aid in setting final policies. The major features of the interim preemption policy have been that states may not enact or enforce (1) any economic regulation of carriers having authority under Title IV of the Federal Aviation Act, including commuters and those registered as air taxis under 14 CFR Part 298; and (2) legal provisions governing such matters as air carrier capitalization, insurance, and bonding, in-flight amenities, and so forth. There has also been a short general statement concerning the authority of airport proprietors.

Comments were received in 1979 from the following parties: the Air Transport Association, the Airport Operators Council International, the Illinois Aeronautics Board, the Maryland Department of Transportation, the Massachusetts Port Authority, the Michigan Aeronautics Commission, the North Dakota Aeronautics Commission, the State of Oregon through its Public Utility Commissioner, the Texas Aeronautics Commission, the Nebraska Department of Aeronautics, the Delaware Transportation Authority, the New York Department of Transportation, and Chapparral Airlines.

The Air Transport Association and the Delaware Transportation Authority supported the interim policy statement. The remaining parties opposed all or parts of the statement. They contended that the policy either (1) unlawfully precluded state regulation of commuter air carriers and air taxis; (2) unlawfully curbed state oversight that did not amount to the regulation of airline rates, routes, and service precluded by the ADA; or (3) improperly restricted the rights of airport proprietors.

Most of the policy statement and many of the comments concern the first category above: the regulation of carriers that were governed by both the states and the federal government prior to passage of the ADA. This once-major issue has long since been resolved by courts and the passage of time. It is now well settled that carriers certificated by the federal government, as well as commuters and air taxis operating under federal authority, are not subject to economic regulation by the states. See, e.g., Hughes Air Corporation v. Public Utility Commission, 644 F.2d 2334 (9th Cir. 1981).

The second category above, indirect regulation of air transportation by states, is of a somewhat different nature. On the one hand, time and litigation have clarified to some extent the reach of federal preemption in this sphere. In 1979 the CAB declared that states “could not interfere with the service that carriers offer in exchange for their rates and fares.” PS-83 at 8. This included charges for headsets, excess baggage, and alcoholic beverages, as well as requirements for insurance coverage and capitalization. Id.; 14 CFR 399.110(d). Although some commentators considered this too restrictive of states’ prerogatives, no court of which the Department is aware has held to the contrary with respect to interference with such matters. See Hodges v. Delta Airlines, 44 F.3d 334, 336 (5th Cir. 1995) (en banc) (airline “service” includes ticketing, the provision of food and drink, baggage handling, and boarding procedures). Also generally Morales v. Trans World Airlines, 503 U.S. 407 (1992) (preempting state-imposed fare advertising guidelines); American Airlines v. Wolens, 512 U.S. 1233 (1994) (preempting state-imposed restrictions on airline frequent flier programs). On the other hand, controversies about the application of the preemption provision have arisen about subjects and in contexts never even mentioned by the CAB. A prime example is the effect of the ADA on state tort law. See Smith v. Comair, Inc., 134 F.3d 254 (4th Cir. 1998) (state tort claim may be preempted as “related to” airline “service”), and Charas v. Trans World Airlines, 160 F.3d 1259 (9th Cir. 2000) (airline “service” read narrowly so as not to preempt state tort claim).

The Department appreciates that it is not possible in a general policy statement to anticipate and address all relevant potential issues. Preemption is a dynamic area, in which questions will likely continue to arise with some regularity in circumstances that cannot now be anticipated. It would be extraordinarily ambitious, and in the end probably futile, to attempt to maintain a policy statement that provides contemporary and meaningful guidance across a full spectrum of situations. Rather, ad hoc administrative determinations, guidance, enforcement activities, and intervention in significant legal actions seem better suited to ensuring the proper implementation of this preemption provision.

The final subject included in the interim policy statement, the ADA’s effect on the authority of airport proprietors, garnered only a small amount of the Board’s attention. There is but one paragraph in the preamble and only a single very broad provision in the interim statement, to the effect that airport proprietors must exercise their authority in reasonable and nondiscriminatory fashion as necessary to accomplish legitimate objectives. PS-83 at 9; 14 CFR 399.110(f). The CAB also expressly acknowledged that the “full scope” of proprietary rights and duties had “yet to be developed.” PS-83 at 9.
